"Three-three-three-three-three - three-three. Three once—"

"And a half." Pervus DeJong.

"Three sixty."

"Four!" DeRoo.

"And ten."

The boy's voice was heard no more.

"I wish they'd stop," whispered Selina.

"Five!" Pervus DeJong.

"Six!" DeRoo, his face very red.

"And ten."

"Seven!"

"It's only jelly sandwiches," said Selina to DeJong, in a panic.

"Eight!" Johannes Ambuul, gone mad.

"Nine!" DeRoo.

"Nine! Nine I'm bid! Nine-nine-nine! Who'll make it—"

"Let him have it. The cup cakes fell a little. Don't—"

"Ten!" said Pervus DeJong.

Barend DeRoo shrugged his great shoulders.

"Ten-ten-ten. Do I hear eleven? Do I hear ten-fifty. Ten-ten-ten tententententenen! Gents! Ten once. Ten twice! Gone—for ten dollars to Pervus DeJong. And a bargain." Adam Ooms mopped his bald head and his cheeks and the damp spot under his chin.

Ten dollars. Adam Ooms knew, as did all the countryside, this was not the sum of ten dollars merely. No basket of food, though it contained nightingales' tongues, the golden apple of Atalanta, wines of rare vintage, could have been adequate recompense for these ten dollars. They represented sweat and blood; toil and hardship; hours under the burning prairie sun at midday; work doggedly carried on through the drenching showers of spring; nights of restless sleep snatched an hour at a time under the sky in the Chicago market place; miles of weary travel down the rude corduroy road between High Prairie and Chicago, now up to the hubs in mud, now blinded by dust and blowing sand.

A sale at Christie's, with a miniature going for a million, could not have met with a deeper hush, a more dramatic babble following the hush.

They ate their lunch together in one corner of Adam Ooms' hall. Selina opened the box and took out the deviled eggs, and the cup cakes that had fallen a little, and the apples, and the sandwiches sliced very, very thin. The coldly appraising eye of all High Prairie, Low Prairie, and New Haarlem watched this sparse provender emerge from the ribbon-tied shoe box. She offered him a sandwich. It looked infinitesimal in his great paw. Suddenly all Selina's agony of embarrassment was swept away, and she was laughing, not wildly or hysterically, but joyously and girlishly. She sank her little white teeth into one of the absurd sandwiches and looked at him, expecting to find him laughing, too. But he wasn't laughing. He looked very earnest, and his blue eyes were fixed hard on the bit of bread in his hand, and his face was very red and clean-shaven. He bit into the sandwich and chewed it solemnly. And Selina thought: "Why, the dear thing! The great big dear thing! And he might have been eating breast of duck. . . . Ten dollars!" Aloud she said, "What made you do it?"

He seemed not to hear her; bit ruminantly into one of the cup cakes. Suddenly: "I can't hardly write at all, only to sign my name and like that."

"Read?"

"Only to spell out the words. Anyways I don't get time for reading. But figuring I wish I knew. 'Rithmetic. I can figger some, but those fellows in Haymarket they are too sharp for me. They do numbers in their head—like that, so quick."

Selina leaned toward him. "I'll teach you. I'll teach you."

"How do you mean, teach me?"

"Evenings."

He looked down at his great calloused palms, then up at her. "What would you take for pay?"

"Pay! I don't want any pay." She was genuinely shocked.

His face lighted up with a sudden thought. "Tell you what. I could start for you the fire, mornings, in the school. And thaw the pump and bring in a pail of water. This month, and January and February and part of March, even, now I don't go to market on account it's winter, I could start you the fire. Till spring. And I could come maybe three times a week, evenings, to Pool's place, for lessons." He looked so helpless, so humble, so huge; and the more pathetic for his hugeness.

She felt a little rush of warmth toward him that was at once impersonal and maternal. She thought again, "Why, the dear thing! The great helpless big thing! How serious he is! And funny." She laughed, suddenly, a gay little laugh, and he, after a puzzled pause, joined her companionably.

"Three evenings a week," repeated Selina, then, from the depths of her ignorance. "Why, I'd love to. I'd—love to."

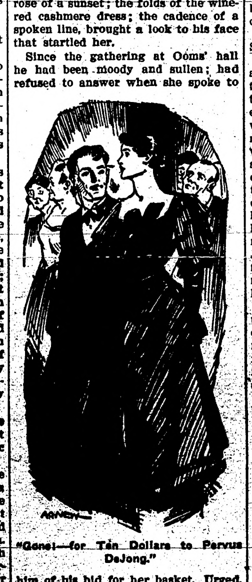
Chapter V

The evenings turned out to be Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays. Supper was over by six-thirty in the Pool household. Pervus was there by seven, very clean as to shirt, his hair brushed till it shone; shy, and given to dropping his hat and bumping against chairs, and looking solemn. Selina was torn between pity and mirth. If only he had blustered. A blustering big man puts the world on the defensive. A gentle giant disarms it.

Selina got out her McBride's grammar and Duffy's arithmetic, and together they started to parse verbs, paper walls, dig cisterns, and extract square roots. They found study impossible at the oilcloth-covered kitchen table, with the Pool household eddying about it. Jakob built a fire in the parlor stove and there they sat, teacher and pupil, their feet resting cosily on the gleaming nickel railing that encircled the wood burner.

On the evening of the first lesson Roelf had glowered throughout supper and had disappeared into the work shed, whence issued a great sound of hammering, sawing, and general clatter. He and Selina had got into the way of spending much time together, in or out of doors. The boy worshiped her inarticulately. She had early discovered that he had a feeling for beauty—beauty of line, texture, color, and grouping—that was rare in one of his years. The feel of a satin ribbon in his fingers; the orange-and-rose of a sunset; the folds of the wine-red cashmere dress; the cadence of a spoken line, brought a look to his face that startled her.

Since the gathering at Ooms' hall he had been moody and sullen; had refused to answer when she spoke to him of his bid for her basket. Urged, he would only say, "Oh, it was just fun to make old Ooms mad."



"Gone—for Ten Dollars to Pervus DeJong."

Now, with the advent of Pervus DeJong, Roelf presented that most touching and miserable of spectacles, a small boy jealous and helpless in his jealousy. Selina had asked him to join the tri-weekly evening lessons; had, indeed, insisted that he be a pupil in the class round the parlor stove.

Roelf would not. He disappeared into his work-shed after supper; did not emerge until after DeJong's departure.

There was something about the sight of this great creature bent laboriously over a slate, the pencil held clumsily in his huge fingers, that moved Selina strangely. Pity wracked her. If she had known to what emotion this pity was akin she might have taken away the slate and given him a tablet, and the whole course of her life would have been different. "Poor lad," she thought. "Poor lad." Chided herself for being amused at his childlike earnestness.

He did not make an apt pupil, though painstaking. Selina would go over a problem or a sentence again and again, patiently, patiently. Then, suddenly, like a hand passed over his face, his smile would come, transforming it. He would smile like a child, and Selina should have been warned by the warm rush of joy that his smile gave her. She would smile, too. He was as pleased as though he had made a fresh and wonderful discovery.

"It's easy," he would say, "when you know it once." Like a boy.

He usually went home by eight-thirty or nine. Often the Pools went to bed before he left. After he had gone Selina was wakeful. She would heat water and wash; brush her hair vigorously; feeling at once buoyant and depressed.

Sometimes they fell to talking. His wife had died in the second year of their marriage, when the child was born. The child, too, had died. A girl. He was unlucky, like that. It was the same with the farm.

Selina's heart melted in pity. He would look down at the great calloused hands; up at her. One of the charms of Pervus DeJong lay in the things that his eyes said and his tongue did not. Women always imagined he was about to say what he looked, but he never did. It made otherwise dull conversation with him most exciting.

His was in no way a shrewd mind. His respect for Selina was almost reverence. But he had this advantage: he had married a woman, had lived with her for two years. She had borne him a child. Selina was a girl in experience. She was a woman capable of a great deal of passion, but she did not know that. Passion was a thing no woman possessed, much less talked about. It simply did not exist, except in men, and then it was something to be ashamed of, like a violent temper, or a weak stomach.

By the first of March he could speak a slow, careful and fairly grammatical English. He could master simple sums. By the middle of March the lessons would cease. There was too much work to do about the farm—night work as well as day. She found herself trying not to think about the time when the lessons should cease. She refused to look ahead to April.

One night, late in February, Selina was conscious that she was trying to control something. She was trying to keep her eyes away from something. She realized that she was trying not to look at his hands. She wanted, crazily, to touch them. She wanted to feel them about her throat. She wanted to put her lips on his hands—brush the backs of them, slowly, moistily, with her mouth, lingeringly. She was terribly frightened. She thought to herself: "I am going crazy. I am losing my mind. There is something the matter with me. I wonder how I look. I must look queer."

At half-past eight she closed her book suddenly. "I'm tired. I think it's the spring coming on." She smiled a little wavering smile. He rose and stretched himself, his great arms high above his head. Selina shivered.

"Two more weeks," he said, "is the last lesson. Well, do you think I have done pretty good—well?"

"Very well," Selina replied evenly. She felt very tired.

The first week in March he was ill, and did not come. A rheumatic affliction to which he was subject. It was the curse of the truck farmer. Selina's evenings were free to devote to Roelf, who glowed again. She sewed, too; read; helped Mrs. Pool with the housework in a gust of sympathy and found strange relief therein; made over an old dress; studied; wrote all her letters (few enough), even one to the dried-apple aunts in Vermont. She no longer wrote to Julie Hempel. She had heard that Julie was to be married to a Kansas man named Arnold. Julie herself had not written. The first week in March passed. He did not come. Nor did he come the following Tuesday or Thursday.

She was bewildered, frightened. All that week she had a curious feeling—or succession of feelings. She was restless, listless, by turns. Period of furious activity, followed by days of inertia. It was the spring, Maartje said. Selina hoped she wasn't going to be ill. She had never felt like that before. She wanted to cry. She was irritable to the point of waspishness with the children in the schoolroom.

On Saturday, the fourteenth of March—he walked in at seven. Klaas, Maartje and Roelf had driven off to a gathering at Low Prairie, leaving Selina with the pigtails and old Jakob. She had promised to make taffy for them, and was in the midst of it when his knock sounded at the kitchen door. All the blood in her body rushed to her head; pounded there hotly. He entered. There slipped down over her a complete armor of calmness, of self-possession; of glib how do you do Mr. DeJong and how are you feeling and won't you sit down and there's no fire in the parlor we'll have to sit here.

He took part in the taffy pulling. Selina wondered if Geertje and Josina would ever have done squealing. It was half-past eight before she bundled them off to bed with a plate of clipped taffy lozenges between them. She heard them scuffling and scrimmaging about in the rare freedom of their parents' absence.

Pervus DeJong and Selina sat at the kitchen table, their books spread out before them on the oilcloth. The sweet, heavy scent of fruit filled the room. Selina brought the parlor lamp into the kitchen, the better to see. It was a nickel-bellied lamp, with a yellow glass shade that cast a mellow golden glow.

"You didn't go to the meeting," primly. "Mr. and Mrs. Pool went."

"No. I didn't go."

"Why not?"

She saw him swallow. "I got through too late. We're fixing to sow tomato seeds in the hotbeds tomorrow."

> Well, it looks as if Pervus was the man. Who does the proposing—Pervus or Selina?

A NEW HIGHWAY PROGRAM OFFERED

Auto License and Gasoline Tax To Provide All Funds Needed Avoids Bond Issues.

St. Paul—A trunk highway construction program which calls for making nearly $180,000,000 available in the next 20 years was outlined in the Minnesota Legislature. It is predicated on the basis of abandoning the plans for refinancing the country reimbursement bonds.

The program was put before leaders of the senate and house. It calls for Enacting a gasoline tax of 2 cents a gallon for the remainder of 1925, beginning May 1.

Friends of the program say the latter reduction on minimum would save the motor vehicle owners $750,000 a year beginning in 1926, which loss would be made up by the addition of one-half cent to the gasoline tax.

The significance of the plan, it is claimed, if it is agreed upon by the legislature and enacted, would be that it would take the highway department out of politics for 20 years and place it on a definite going basis through all that period.

Based on Present Revenue.

The whole program is based on present revenue from motor vehicle taxes, and what it is estimated now would be available from a gasoline tax. The chief objection, however, is that during the 20 years the number of automobiles would increase and therefore the revenue from automobile taxes and the gasoline taxes would be increased, bringing an amount for new construction in the 20 years to a figure in excess of $180,000,000.

Governor Insists on Reorganization.

In a recent interview Governor Christianson placed upon the 1925 legislature the definite responsibility for meeting public demand for saving taxpayers' money when he said that a mandate from their constituents calls upon a majority of the legislators to enact a program for reorganization of the state government.

"I told the voters who elected me that I would try to make every tax dollar paid into the state treasury give 100 cents of service," the governor said. "This week there has been placed before the upper body of the legislature an instrument which would enable me to carry out that pledge.

"I expect the legislature to make the reorganization bill a law. It is the outstanding measure before the legislators."

Mr. Christianson said that there is ample time for intelligent action by the legislature, which is to adjourn April 23.

"The people elected me governor of Minnesota," the governor continued. "The voters demanded that there be a reorganization of the state government along lines which would accomplish economy and efficiency. The house interim committee has given the basis for such a plan. The senate committee has improved it and the house committee is perfecting its draft. The whole issue now is before the legislature as its paramount work."

Governor Christianson pointed to a heap of letters and communications, which are pouring into his office from all over the state, as evidence that reorganization is the key of all public demand in Minnesota.

Mr. Christianson made known that he did not propose to send a special message to the legislature bearing on reorganization. He said he had stated his position clearly in his inaugural address.

Bus Bill Passes House.

The motor bus control bill was passed by the house of representatives 108 to 18, after it weathered a four-hour storm of protest from several legislators who insisted the measure would drive the busses from the highways. But when the final vote was taken, most of the opponents voted for the bill, although their amendments to loosen two of the most important sections were rejected. All bus lines operating in Minnesota, excepting those running within a city or between contiguous cities, such as the Twin City bus lines, are affected by the bill. It is provided that the railroad and warehouse commission shall have control of bus lines, determining what routes buses shall operate upon, the kind of service they shall give, the rates of fares charged and the amount of liability insurance to be carried.

Adopt Rural Credit Report.

Reduction of the loan limits under the rural credits act and creation of a system of district appraisers are authorized in a bill introduced.

The bill was introduced in the senate by Senators C. A. Lund, W. A. Just and C. Rosenmier, senate members of the joint legislative committee which investigated the rural credits bureau, and in the house by Representatives R. A. Wilkinson, Henry Spindler and Marius Waldal, the three house members who served on the in-

Ore Tax Bill Defeated.

Increasing the occupational tax upon the business of iron mining from 6 to 10 per cent was rejected by the house by a vote of 84 to 34.

The vote was precipitated because of a minority report being placed before the house in favor of the bill. The tax committee had voted its indefinite postponement 16 to 1, the lone opponent being S. A. Stockwell, the author. Mr. Stockwell brought out the minority report and when the vote was taken on the motion to adopt the minority report it lost, 34 to 84.

Party Identity Bill Looses.

The house will have none of a plan to restore the party identity to its members in place of the nonpartisanism that now prevails. By a vote of 82 to 30 the lower branch refused to give further life to the bill introduced by Representative John E. Stevens of Minneapolis calling for the designation of legislators by their political party affiliations.

Legislators Pay Tribute to Folwell.

Work of the Minnesota legislature was halted, while the legislators paid tribute to Dr. William Watts Folwell, first president of the University of Minnesota, as "master teacher" and builder of the school.

Answering a special memorial read by Rev. Richard S. Reed, chaplain of the senate, and a tribute by Lotus D. Coffman, now president of the university, Dr. Folwell told the legislature that "greater things are in store for Minnesota, when the population reaches 115 to the square mile—and it is not unreasonable to expect it—and when the host of our people swells to 10,000,000."

He said he could claim credit for but few things, one being the discovery of Maria Sanford, "lover of her kind and country." Dr. Folwell, who was 93 years old February 14, now is at work on the third volume of his "History of Minnesota."

Bank Guaranty Bill Introduced.

A "bank deposit guaranty" bill which in effect is a system of insurance on which depositors pay annual premiums each time they make a deposit was introduced in the house by Representative Michael Kramer of Belview.

While in a general way the bill is a "guaranty" measure to safeguard depositors money, its plan is entirely different from the usual run of guaranty bills.

Mr. Kramer's plan provides that the depositors, themselves, shall pay directly to the bank a percentage of the amount they deposit each time and receive a receipt in acknowledgment, this money to go into a guaranty fund to be used for meeting claims on insolvent banks. The bill would apply only to state banks. National banks could come under the act if they wished.

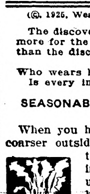
The KITCHEN CABINET

(©, 1925, Western Newspaper Union.)

The discovery of a new dish does more for the happiness of mankind than the discovery of a new star.

Who wears her duty like a crown is every inch a queen.

SEASONABLE GOOD THINGS



When you have a few of the large coarser outside stalks of celery, cut them into dice and cook in boiling salted water until tender. Meanwhile heat one cupful of thin cream to which a tablespoonful of butter has been added, season with salt and pepper, and one-eighth teaspoonful of grated nutmeg. Drain the cooked celery and pour the hot cream over it in the serving dish.

Savory Chicken.—Select a six-pound chicken and cut into pieces. Dredge with well-seasoned flour and saute in fat until well browned on both sides. Lay in a casserole and place around it one dozen small onions, three stalks of celery cut into inch pieces and two medium-sized carrots cut into slices. Sprinkle with one teaspoonful of salt, and pour three cupfuls of strained tomatoes over the top. Dot the top with one tablespoonful of butter, cover tightly and cook in a moderate oven until the vegetables are tender. Usually three hours will be needed for the cooking. Serve with boiled rice.

Vegetable Combination.—This dish will be sufficient for a main dish without meat. Place a cooked cauliflower in the center of a hot chop plate and surround it with mounds of the following cooked and seasoned vegetables: Small onions, diced carrots, diced beets, diced turnips and shredded string beans. Prepare a mock hollandaise as follows: Melt three tablespoonfuls of butter, add two tablespoonfuls of flour and blend well together. Add gradually one cupful of hot water, stir until well thickened. Season with one-half teaspoonful of salt, a little cayenne and a tablespoonful of lemon juice. Pour this sauce over two well-beaten eggs and pour at once over the cauliflower.

Take small canned beets, chop after draining and serve them heated in hot butter with a dash of vinegar and cayenne.

A nice way to bake apples is to fill the cavities with brown sugar and butter and pour a little water into the pan. Baste often with the water and butter while baking.

Good Things to Eat.

Did you ever try dried peas, baked? If not, here will be a new dish. Soak the peas over night and boil them until tender in the same water. Drain and put to bake with an onion and a scored piece of fat salt pork.

Baked Onions.—Peel six medium-sized onions and boil until tender. Drain and place in a shallow pan which has been well-buttered. Pour over one cupful of milk in which a tablespoonful of tapioca has been stirred, add a tablespoonful of butter, salt and pepper to taste. Place in the oven and bake until a light brown.

Banana and Rice Pudding.—Take two cupfuls of cold boiled rice, add one-half cupful of cream, with sugar to taste, then add a sliced banana or two. Bake for fifteen minutes. Serve hot or cold.

Syrian Meat Dish.—Cut three pounds of lean meat from a shoulder of mutton, cut into inch-pieces. Slice three large onions and brown them in four tablespoonfuls of fat. When partly cooked add the meat, stirring until well-browned; add a pint of tomato juice and set back to simmer for an hour. Season to taste. Scald three-fourths of a cupful of rice with a pint of boiling water, cook ten minutes, drain, add three tablespoonfuls of bacon fat and cook until the fat is all absorbed. To the fried rice add three cupfuls of boiling water and cook in an open saucepan until the water is all evaporated. Brown half a cupful of nut meats in a half teaspoonful of butter. Serve the meat in the center of the dish, with a border of rice and sprinkle the browned nut meats over all.

Garcia Salad.—Cut equal parts of celery and apples into strips two inches long. Serve on lettuce with French dressing, garnish with eighths of ripe tomato and a slice or truffle.

Lambs' Hearts.—As lambs' hearts are small, one should be served for each portion. Prepare them, slash and wash well, removing the arterial walls. Place in a deep dish and cover with any good rich stock, adding worcestershire sauce and tomato catsup to give piquant flavor. Cover closely and cook for two hours.

Cheese Salad.—Soak one tablespoonful of gelatin in one-third of a cupful of water, then add one cupful of boiling water and one teaspoonful of salt. When the mixture begins to stiffen, beat until fluffy. Fold in one-half pound of strong American cheese grated, one-half a can of pimentoes cut fine and one cupful of whipped cream. Let stand to become firm. Heap lightly on head lettuce, place one-half of a canned peach at the side and serve with a spoonful of highly seasoned boiled or mayonnaise dressing.

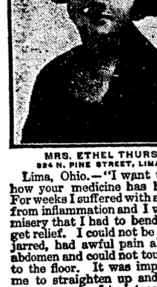
HOW TWO WOMEN AVOIDED OPERATIONS
The Following Letters of Mrs. Thurston and Mrs. Beard Carry an Encouraging Message to Other Sick Women



MRS. ETHEL THURSTON
824 N. PINE STREET, LIMA, OHIO

Lima, Ohio.—"I want to tell you how your medicine has helped me. For weeks I suffered with awful pains from inflammation and I was in such misery that I had to bend double to get relief. I could not be touched or jarred, had awful pain all over my abdomen and could not touch my feet to the floor. It was impossible for me to straighten up and the pains never ceased. I took treatments for some time and finally was told I would have to have an operation. I do not believe in operations, and I had read so much about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound that I told my husband I would try it before I gave up. I soon began to feel that it was doing me good. The awful misery began to leave me, also the backache. I have a good appetite and am gaining in weight. Taking the medicine was the best thing I ever did. I feel like it has saved my life and I do not hesitate to say so to my friends. At least it saved me from a dreaded operation and I am still taking it. I am willing to answer letters from women asking about the medicine."—Mrs. Ethel Thurston, 824 North Pine Street, Lima, Ohio.

Mrs. Beard's Letter

Eddy, Texas.—"I will write you a few words, thinking it will do some one else good. Two doctors said I would have to be operated on because for nearly twelve months I suffered from a weakness from which I could get no relief. I was restless and nervous and was not able to walk across the house. They said it was the Change of Life. I saw Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound advertised in the newspapers, and as I could not get any help from doctors I thought I would give that a trial. I began with the liquid and it helped me some, then you advised me to take the tablet form and I began to improve rapidly. I have gained in weight from 105 to 170 pounds. I recommend it to all women with this trouble."—Mrs. M. E. Beard, R. No. 1, Box 148, Eddy, Texas.

The worlds longest telephone circuit is between Chicago and Los Angeles—2000 miles. It would take seven days to make the round trip and would cost a minimum of $200. A talk to Chicago over the telephone for ten minutes would cost about ten dollars. In many instances the telephone call today takes the place of a seven-day trip. Nowhere but in America is any such service rendered.

Let's Get a 92-Scoring Butter!

It is very important to deliver your cream twice a week in order to get a 92-scoring butter.

All our butter is scored and inspected by the Government Inspector and whatever score he places on our butter is the basis on which the Creameries Ass'n makes payment.

Cream a week old will never make butter scoring 92 even tho it is sweet. Our biggest trouble is with old flavor which shows up in butter a week or so after it is made.

It is very encouraging the way our patrons have realized the necessity of delivering their cream twice a week yet some seem to think that as long as their cream is sweet it will make the highest grade butter.

Co-operate with us and you will get more money for your butterfat. In this way only we will get a 92-scoring butter.

Labor —that's the Big Cost in Painting

LABOR accounts for about three-quarters of the entire cost of a painting job. Materials cost only about one-quarter—so the possible saving in cost between the best and the cheaper materials is not worth consideration.

And by specifying the best paint, and getting years of extra wear, you save the big labor cost of frequent re-painting. You get the most economical job in the end.

PATTON'S Sun-Proof PAINT

—is longer-lasting because it is richer in linseed oil. It will not peel or blister if applied to surfaces fit for painting. It forms a tough film of protection against time and weather.

Let us tell you more about this cut-cost paint.

MARRIED

SYNOPSIS. — Introducing "So Big" (Dirk DeJong) in his infancy. And his mother, Selina DeJong, daughter of Simeon Peake, gambler and gentleman of fortune. Her life, to young womanhood in Chicago in 1888, has been unconventional, somewhat seamy, but generally enjoyable. At school her chum is Julie Hempel, daughter of August Hempel, butcher. Simeon is killed in a quarrel that is not his own, and Selina, nineteen years old and practically destitute, secures a position as teacher at the High Prairie school, in the outskirts of Chicago, living at the home of a truck farmer, Klaas Pool. In Roelf, twelve years old, son of Klaas, Selina perceives a kindred spirit, a lover of beauty, like herself. Selina hears gossip concerning the affection of the "Widow Paarlenberg," rich and good-looking, for Pervus DeJong, poor truck farmer, who is insensible to the widow's attractions. For a community "sociable" Selina prepares a lunch box, dainty, but not of ample proportions, which is to be "auctioned," according to custom. The smallness of the box excites derision and Selina is heartbroken. But the bidding becomes spirited, DeJong finally securing it for $10, a ridiculously high price. Over their lunch basket, which Selina and DeJong share together, the school-teacher arranges to instruct the farmer, whose education has been neglected.

Selina opened McBride's grammar. "Ahem!" a school-teacherly cough. "Now, then, we'll parse this sentence: Blucher arrived on the field of Waterloo just as Wellington was receiving the last onslaught of Napoleon. 'Just' may be treated as a modifier of the dependent clause. That is: 'Just' means: at the time at which. Well. Just here modifies at the time. And Wellington is the . . ."

This for half an hour. Selina kept her eyes resolutely on the book. His voice went on with the dry business of parsing and its deep resonance struck a response from her as a harp responds when a hand is swept over its strings. Selina kept her eyes resolutely on the book. Yet she saw, as though her eyes rested on them, his large, strong hands. On the backs of them was a fine golden down that deepened at his wrists. Heavier and darker at the wrists. She found herself praying a little for strength—for strength against this horror and wickedness. This sin, this abomination that held her. A terrible, stark and pitiful prayer, couched in the idiom of the Bible.

"Oh, God, keep my eyes and my thoughts away from him. Away from his hands. Let me keep my eyes and my thoughts away from the golden hairs on his wrists. Let me not think of his wrists. . . . The owner of the southwest quarter sells a strip 20 rods wide along the south side of his farm. How much does he receive at $150 per acre?"

He triumphed in this transaction, began the struggle with the square root of 576. Square roots agonized him. She washed the slate clean with her little sponge. He was leaning close in his effort to comprehend the fiendish little figures that marched so tractably under Selina's masterly pencil.

She took it up, glibly. "The remainder must contain twice the product of the tens by the units plus the square of the units." He blinked.

She was breathing rather fast. The fire in the kitchen stove snapped and cracked. "Now, then, suppose you do that for me. We'll wipe it out. There! What must the remainder contain?"

He took it up, slowly, haltingly. The house was terribly still except for the man's voice. "The remainder . . . twice . . . product . . . tens . . . units . . ." A something in his voice—a note—a timbre. She felt herself swaying queerly, as though the whole house were gently rocking. Little delicious agonizing shivers chased each other, hot and cold, up her arms, down her legs, over her spine. . . . "plus the square of the units is the same as the sum twice the tens . . . twice . . . the tens . . . the tens." His voice stopped.

Selina's eyes leaped from the book to his hands, uncontrollably. Something about them startled her. They were clenched fists. Her eyes now leaped from those clenched fists to the face of the man beside her. Her head came up, and back. Her wide, startled eyes met his. His were a blaze of blinding blue in his tanned face. Some corner of her mind that was still working clearly noted this. Then his hands unclenched. The blue blaze scorched her, enveloped her. Her cheek knew the harsh, cool feel of a man's cheek. She sensed the potent, terrifying, pungent odor of close contact—a mixture of tobacco smoke, his hair, freshly laundered linen, an indefinable body smell. It was a mingling that disgusted and attracted her. She was at once repelled and drawn. Then she felt his lips on hers and her own, incredibly, responding eagerly, wholly to that pressure.

Chapter VI

They were married the following May, just two months later. Selina was at once bewildered and calm; rebellious and content. Overlaying these emotions was something like grim amusement. Beneath them, something like fright. She moved with a strange air of fatality. It was as if she were being drawn inexorably, against her will, her judgment, her plans, into something sweet and terrible. When with Pervus she was elated, gay, voluble. He talked little; looked at her dumbly, worshipingly.

There were days when the feeling of unreality possessed her. She, a truck farmer's wife, living in High Prairie the rest of her days! Why, no! No! Was this the great adventure that her father had always spoken of? She, who was going to be a happy wayfarer down the path of life—any one of a dozen things. This High Prairie winter was to have been only an episode. Not her life! She looked at Maartje. Oh, she'd never be like that. That was stupid, unnecessary. Pink and blue dresses in the house, for her. Frills on the window curtains. Flowers in bowls.

Some of the pangs and terrors with which most prospective brides are assailed she confided to Mrs. Pool while that active lady was slamming about the kitchen.

"Did you ever feel scared and—and sort of—scared when you thought about marry, Mrs. Pool?"

Maartje Pool's hands were in a great batch of bread dough which she pummeled and slapped and kneaded vigorously. She shook out a handful of flour on the baking board while she held the dough mass in the other hand, then plumped it down and again began to knead, both hands doubled into fists.

She laughed a short little laugh. "I ran away."

"You did! You mean you really ran—but why? Didn't you lo—like Klaas?"

Maartje Pool kneaded briskly, the color high in her cheeks, what with the vigorous pummeling and rolling, and something else that made her look strangely young for the moment—girlish, almost. "Sure I liked him. I liked him."

"But you ran away?"

"Not far. I came back. Nobody ever knew I ran, even. But I ran. I knew."

"Why did you come back?"

Maartje elucidated her philosophy without being in the least aware that it could be called by any such high-sounding name. "You can't run away far enough. Except you stop living you can't run away from life."

The girlish look had fled. She was world-old. Her strong arms ceased their pounding and thumping for a moment. On the steps outside Klaas and Jakob were scanning the weekly reports preparatory to going into the city late that afternoon.

Selina had the difficult task of winning Roelf to her all over again. He was like a trusting little animal, who, wounded by the hand he has trusted, is shy of it. Still, he could not withstand her long. Together they dug and planted flower beds in Pervus' dingy front yard. It was too late for tulips now. Pervus had brought her some seeds from town. They ranged all the way from poppies to asters; from purple iris to morning glories. The last named were to form the back-porch vine, of course, because they grew quickly. Selina, city-bred, was ignorant of varieties, but insisted she wanted an old-fashioned garden—marigolds, pinks, mignonette, phlox. She and Roelf dug, spaded, planted.

Her trousseau was of the scantiest. Pervus' household was already equipped with such linens as they would need. The question of a wedding gown troubled her until Maartje suggested that she be married in the old Dutch wedding dress that lay in the bride's chest in Selina's bedroom.

"A real Dutch bride," Maartje said. "Your man will think that is fine." Pervus was delighted. Selina basked in his love like a kitten in the sun. She was, after all, a very lonely little bride with only two photographs on the shelf in her bedroom to give her courage and counsel. The old Dutch wedding gown was many inches too large for her. The skirt-band overlapped her slim waist; her slender little bosom did not fill out the generous width of the bodice; but the effect of the whole was amazingly quaint as well as pathetic.

They were married at the Pools'. Klaas and Maartje had insisted on furnishing the wedding supper—ham, chickens, sausages, cakes, pickles, beer. The Reverend Dekker married them, and all through the ceremony Selina chided herself because she could not keep her mind on his words in the fascination of watching his short, stubby beard as it waggled with every motion of his jaw. Pervus looked stiff, solemn and uncomfortable in his wedding blacks—not at all the handsome giant of the everyday corduroys and blue shirt. In the midst of the ceremony Selina had her moment of panic when she actually saw herself running shrieking from this company, this man, this house, down the road, on, on toward—toward what? The feeling was so strong that she was surprised to find herself still standing there in the Dutch wedding gown answering "I do" in the proper place.

After the wedding they went straight to DeJong's house. In May the vegetable farmer cannot neglect his garden even for a day. The house had been made ready for them.

Throughout the supper Selina had had thoughts which were so foolish and detached as almost to alarm her.

"Now I am married. I am Mrs. Pervus DeJong. That's a pretty name. It would look quite distinguished on a calling card, very spidery and fine:

"MRS. PERVUS DE JONG

At Home Fridays."

She recalled this later, grimly, when she was Mrs. Pervus DeJong, at home not only Fridays, but Saturdays, Sundays, Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays.

They drove down the road to De Jong's place. Selina thought, "Now I am driving home with my husband. I feel his shoulder against mine. I wish he would talk. I wish he would say something. Still, I am not frightened."

Pervus' market wagon was standing in the yard, shafts down. He should have gone to market today; would certainly have to go tomorrow, starting early in the afternoon so as to get a good stand in the Haymarket. By the light of his lantern the wagon seemed to Selina to be a symbol. She had often seen it before, but now that it was to be a part of her life—this the DeJong market wagon and she Mrs. DeJong—she saw clearly what a crazy, disreputable and poverty-proclaiming old vehicle it was, in contrast with the neat strong wagon in Klaas Pool's yard, smart with green paint and red lettering that announced, "Klaas Pool, Garden Produce." With the two sleek farm horses the turnout looked as prosperous and comfortable as Klaas himself.

Pervus swung her down from the seat of the buggy, his hand about her waist, and held her so for a moment, close. Selina said: "You must have that wagon painted, Pervus. And the seat-springs fixed and the sideboard mended."

He stared. "Wagon!"

"Yes. It looks a sight."

The house was tidy enough, but none too clean. Pervus lighted the lamps. There was a fire in the kitchen stove. It made the house seem stuffy on this mild May night. Selina thought that her own little bedroom at the Pools', no longer hers, must be deliciously cool and still with the breeze fanning fresh from the west. Pervus was putting the horse into the barn. The bedroom was off the sitting room. The window was shut. This last year had taught Selina to prepare the night before for next morning's rising, so as to lose the least possible time. She did this now, unconsciously. She brushed her hair, laid out tomorrow's garments, put on her high-necked, long-sleeved nightgown and got into this strange bed. She heard Pervus DeJong shut the kitchen door; the latch clicked, the lock turned. Heavy quick footsteps across the bare kitchen floor. This man was coming into her room. . . . "You can't run far enough," Maartje Pool had said. "Except you stop living you can't run away from life."

Next morning it was dark when he awakened her at four. She started up with a little cry and sat up, straining her ears, her eyes. "Is that you, father?" She was little Selina Peake again, and Simeon Peake had come in, gay, debonair, from a night's gaming.

Pervus DeJong was already padding about the room in stocking feet. "What—what time is it? What's the matter, father? Why are you up? Haven't you gone to bed. . . ." Then she remembered.

Pervus DeJong laughed and came toward her. "Get up, little lazy bones. It's after four. All yesterday's work I've got to do, and all today's. Breakfast, little Lina, breakfast. You are a farmer's wife now."

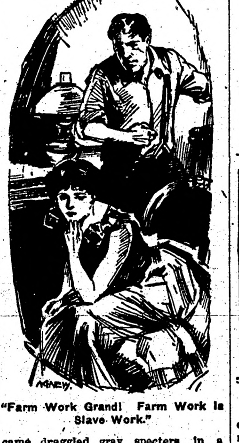
* * * * * * *

Dirk DeJong was born in the bedroom off the sitting room on the fifteenth day of March, of a bewildered, somewhat resentful, but deeply interested mother; and a proud, foolish, and vainglorious father whose air of achievement, considering the really slight part he had played in the long, tedious, and racking business, was disproportionate. The name Dirk had sounded to Selina like something tall, straight, and slim. Pervus had chosen it. It had been his grandfather's name.

Sometimes, during those months, Selina would look back on her first winter in High Prairie—that winter of the icy bedroom; the chill black drum, the schoolhouse fire, the chilblains, the Pool pork—and it seemed a lovely dream; a time of ease, of freedom, of careless happiness.

Pervus DeJong loved his pretty young wife, and she him. But young love thrives on color, warmth, beauty. It becomes prosaic and inarticulate when forced to begin its day at four in the morning by reaching blindly, dazedly, for limp and obscure garments dangling from bedpost or chair, and to end that day at nine, numb and sodden with weariness, after seventeen hours of physical labor.

It was a wet summer. Pervus' choice tomato plants, so carefully set out in the hope of a dry season, became draggled gray specters in a waste of mire. Of fruit the field bore one tomato the size of a marble.



"Farm Work Grand! Farm Work Is Slave Work."

For the rest, the crops were moderately successful on the DeJong place. But the work necessary to make this so was heartbreaking. Selina had known, during her winter at the Pools', that Klaas, Roelf, and old Jakob worked early and late, but her months there had encompassed what is really the truck farmer's leisure period. She had arrived in November. She had married in May. From May until October it was necessary to tend the fields with a concentration amounting to fury. Selina had never dreamed that human beings toiled like that for sustenance. Toil was a thing she had never encountered until coming to High Prairie. Now she saw her husband wrenching a living out of the earth by sheer muscle, sweat, and pain. During June, July, August, and September the good black prairie soil for miles around was teeming, a hotbed of plenty. There was born in Selina at this time a feeling for the land that she was never to lose. Perhaps the child within her had something to do with this. She was aware of a feeling of kinship with the earth; an illusion of splendor, of fulfillment.

As cabbages had been cabbages, and no more, to Klaas Pool, so, to Pervus, these carrots, beets, onions, turnips, and radishes were just so much produce, to be planted, tended, gathered, marketed. But to Selina, during that summer, they became a vital part in the vast mechanism of a living world. Pervus, earth, sun, rain, all elemental forces that labored to produce the food for millions of humans. She thought of Chicago's children. If they had red cheeks, clear eyes, nimble brains it was because Pervus brought them the food that made them so. Something of this she tried to convey to Pervus. He only stared, his blue eyes wide and unresponsive.

"Farm work grand! Farm work is slave work. Yesterday, from the load of carrots in town I didn't make enough to bring you the goods for the child so when it comes you should have clothes for it. It's better I feed them to the live stock."

Do Selina and her husband "live happily ever afterward"? It is obvious that there is potential tragedy in the situation.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Cruel Old Custom

There was a time when "laughing" faces were actually manufactured to meet the demand of those who wished to be amused. Up to the end of the reign of James II, human "sculpture" work was carried out by roving tribes of gypsies called Comprachios, who were of Spanish origin. They bought and even kidnaped children, and practiced a science or art of human disfiguration.

Children thus treated grew up with an immovable and fantastic grin. They were an attraction at all successful traveling booths and entertainments until the custom was repressed by William III.

English Using "Dope"

Dope is making dreadful inroads in England, its dangers being principally due to British certainty that it could never get a hold "with English men and women." It has got its hold. One seizure, recently, was of $500,000 worth. The students of one girls' school have been revealed as leading the most amazing night lives in the search for pleasure. GERMANS FAIL TO ELECT PRESIDENT

Berlin.—Final returns from Sunday's presidential election in Germany show that none of the seven candidates received a majority, as required by the constitution, making a second election necessary.

The second polling day has been fixed for April 26. On this occasion, the candidate having the highest number of votes will be declared elected.

The polling of the various candidates was as follows:

Dr. Karl Jarres, candidate of the combined Nationalist and Conservative Bourgeois parties, 10,387,323.

Former Chancellor Marx, Centrist, 3,883,676.

Ernst Thaelmann, Communist, 1,869,553.

Dr. Held, Bavarian People's party, 1,003,278.

The total vote, in excess of 26,812,000, is slightly less than 69 per cent of the qualified electorate.

The greatest gainers in the election were the Socialists, who profited at the expense of the Communists. Only at Halle, where the Communists' campaign was inaugurated by a shooting affair were the Communists the gainers, their vote there increasing 30 per cent over last December's parliamentary polling.

On the whole, election day passed off quietly, but young men barely of voting age, leagued in the monarchist "steel helmet" or the Republican "reichsbanner" organizations could not resist the temptation to challenge each other in street brawls, with Communist youths occasionally joining in the frays. These incidents had no serious results.

BANDITS LOOT EXPRESS CAR

Chicago.—Police and American Express officials are still without a clue that promised solution of the holdup of an express car on the New York Central train early Sunday by two robbers who escaped with loot estimated at $1,000.

They had hoped that Arthur F. Planck, Jr., 23, might be able to give them some information of value when a valise tag bearing his name was found near the railway station in La Porte, from where the robbers fled after leaping from the looted train.

"I didn't know that the tag on my valise was gone until police came to my home," said Planck. "It must have dropped off when I appeared at the station to take my train." Police expressed confidence in Planck's story.

Howard Young of Buffalo, express messenger in charge of the car at the time of the robbery, assisted express officials in checking the contents of the car. Young, who has been employed by the concern for eight years, was exonerated from blame by the company.

Young said that the robbers, nattily attired, handed him a note at the Englewood station in Chicago signed by F. N. Hotchkiss, express agent, authorizing them to ride in the car as far as LaPorte. This note, which Young said the robbers took with them, proved later to be a forgery.

RICHARD, 4 OTHERS FINED

Sentence Follows Conviction for Conspiracy on March 19.

Newark, N. J.—George L. ("Tex") Rickard, nationally known fight promoter, Monday was fined $7,000 by Federal Judge Bodine for conspiracy to violate the law regarding illegal transportation of prizefight films.

Rickard and four co-defendants were convicted in federal court in Trenton on March 19, on the charge which was brought in connection with the transportation of the Dempsey-Carpentier fight films.

All five men were in court to receive sentence. Fines were given the other four convicted men as follows: Fred Quimby, New York, motion picture producer, $7,000; Jasper C. "Jap" Muma, Washington and New York newspaper man, $7,000; Teddy Hayes, of Los Angeles, former secretary to Jack Dempsey, $1,000, and Frank B. Flournoy, Madison Square Garden match maker, $1,000.

Rickard, Quimby and Muma were fined $5,000 each on the count charging conspiracy and $1,000 each on each of the two counts charging transportation. Judge Bodine fined Hayes and Flournoy but $1,000 each as they were held to be employ's of the leaders in the conspiracy.

GOOD THINGS TO EAT

A very simple potato salad may be prepared, using boiled potatoes. Make small balls using a small French scoop, marinate the potato balls in French dressing until time for serving, then drain and roll in finely minced parsley, arrange on lettuce leaves and garnish with roses of mayonnaise.

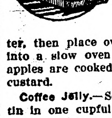
For a green and white luncheon, mix cream cheese with enough thick cream to mold into balls. Prepare half of the cheese by mixing with chopped chives and parsley or with young onions chopped. Arrange the balls in nests on lettuce and serve with a salad dressing passed in a bowl.

Hungarian Goulash.—Cut into small pieces one-half pound of fresh pork fat, brown in a saucepan, remove the pork scraps, add one onion to the fat (finely chopped); when brown add two tablespoonfuls of flour, one-half teaspoonful of paprika, one-fourth teaspoonful of pepper, one tablespoonful of salt, and one-half cupful of strained tomato; stir until smooth, add two pounds of the bottom of the round of beef cut into inch cubes; add also one cupful of water, one clove, one bay leaf, one teaspoonful of chopped parsley and one stalk of celery chopped fine. Pour into a casserole; cover and cook in a slow oven three hours.

Baked Sweetbreads With Bacon.—Blanch the sweetbreads by soaking in water, changing until the water remains clear, then cook until firm and white at simmering temperature. Remove the pipes and fibers, roll each tight in a piece of cheesecloth and press under a weight for several hours. Beat one egg with a teaspoonful of onion juice, add one teaspoonful of salt, brush the sweetbreads with this mixture, and sift over them fine bread crumbs. Arrange slices of bacon in a dripping pan, on these place the sweetbreads, and cover with another slice of bacon. Bake 20 minutes in a hot oven. Serve with the sauce from the pan, thickened, and one tablespoonful of lemon juice added.

Potato Salad.—New potatoes make the best salad—boil them with their jackets on. Cut into neat cubes after removing the skin. Season with salt and pepper. To two cupfuls add one-half teaspoonful of onion juice, one tablespoonfuls of finely minced capers, two tablespoonfuls of melted butter and one tablespoonful of lemon juice. Toss all together carefully, chill. When ready to serve cover with a cooked salad dressing highly seasoned. Serve on crisp lettuce, garnish with rings of hard cooked egg white. Put the yolks through a sieve and sift on top.

Everyday Good Things.



Here is a pie than can be served the children: Slice a few apples and place in the bottom of a buttered baking dish, sprinkle with sugar and cinnamon or with a little nutmeg or grated lemon rind. Butter a few slices of bread and plunge them into cold water, then place over the apples. Put into a slow oven and bake until the apples are cooked. Serve with a thin custard.

Coffee Jelly.—Soak one box of gelatin in one cupful of cold water until soft. Add one cupful of sugar and one pint each of boiling water and strong coffee. Stir until the sugar is dissolved and the gelatin also; add one teaspoonful of vanilla extract, strain through a double cheesecloth into wet molds. Serve with a soft custard sauce.

If you have four quarts of sour milk, make your own cottage cheese. Pour into the milk, stirring lightly, boiling water until the curds begin to gather. Pour into a colander very gently to drain; add salt, butter and cream, mix well and you have a dish which is not only appetizing but very nourishing.

Brook Trout, Baked in Cream.—Butter a baking dish and lay in the well-dressed fish, cover with rich cream, put into a hot oven for ten minutes, season lightly when the cooking is nearly done.

Cole Slaw.—Boil one-half cupful of vinegar, add one tablespoonful of butter, take from the fire and add a beaten egg and three tablespoonfuls of sweet cream. Season with salt, pepper, mustard and sugar. Pour over finely shredded cabbage.

Orange Pie.—Cream one-fourth of a cupful of butter, add three-fourths of a cupful of sugar, the juice of an orange and half of the grated rind, together with the juice of half a lemon; beat until light, then add the beaten yolks of three eggs, the white of one beaten stiff. Bake in one crust. When cool, cover with a meringue, using two egg whites and three tablespoonfuls of sugar.

HELP FOR MOTHERS OF AILING DAUGHTERS

Mrs. Quigg and Mrs. Betton Tell in the Following Letters What Is Best To Do

DAUGHTER OF MRS. QUIGG
210 MAIN STREET, ROYERSFORD, PA.

Royersford, Pa. — "My daughter was sickly from the time she was 13 years old, and when she was 15 she was irregular and also had severe headaches and pains in her sides and back. She was this way about six months before I began giving her Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound regularly although she had tried it before. It helped her very much. She is not bothered by headaches, backaches, or cramps any more, and has not missed but one days work. We recommend it to other mothers with girls who have these troubles." —Mrs. QUIGG, 210 Main Street, Royersford, Pa.

Mrs. Betton's Letter

Ridgely, Md.—"I want to tell you how much good your Vegetable Compound has done my daughter. Before she started taking your medicine she was in a nervous, run-down condition, so that she could hardly sleep at night. She always had a pain in her side and sometimes cramps so that she would have to go to bed. She is a schoolgirl and was going to school only half the time because she was so weak and run-down she could not stand it to walk there some days. She was this way for three or four years. She had been reading your advertisements in the different newspapers and she noticed that some of the girls and women had suffered just as she had. So she took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and is a lot better. With the first bottle everybody could see a big change. She can go to school every day and can eat just as much as any one else, when before she did not have any appetite. We have told others about the medicine, and we are perfectly willing for you to use these facts as a testimonial. We are also willing to answer letters from other women concerning the help my daughter has received from the Vegetable Compound." — Mrs. JOSEPH BETTON, Ridgely, Maryland.

Serious Lumber Situation

The lumber cut per capita in 1906 was 525 board feet. This figure had dropped in 1922 to 285 board feet, and at present the cut is dropping off at the rate of 1,000,000,000 board feet a year, which indicates the serious forest situation which confronts the country.

Let's Get a 92-Scoring Butter!

It is very important to deliver your cream twice a week in order to get a 92-scoring butter.

All our butter is scored and inspected by the Government Inspector and whatever score he places on our butter is the basis on which the Creameries Ass'n makes payment.

Cream a week old will never make butter scoring 92 even tho it is sweet. Our biggest trouble is with old flavor which shows up in butter a week or so after it is made.

It is very encouraging the way our patrons have realized the necessity of delivering their cream twice a week yet some seem to think that as long as their cream is sweet it will make the highest grade butter.

Co-operate with us and you will get more money for your butterfat. In this way only we will get a 92-scoring butter.

Man Injured In Accident

Last Thursday Leo Horien of this village was the victim of a unique accident. While he was hitching up his horses to the dray wagon, they suddenly started, throwing Leo off his balance. In his fall, the hook of one of the tugs caught in his mouth, cutting a big gash in his cheek. He was taken to Thief River Falls where he got first-aid treatment.

Mrs. Clarence Erickson was taken suddenly ill last Thurs. Dr. J. T. Bowers was called to attend to her case, and she was much better the next day.

There has been no school past week, as the entire body of students and teachers have been enjoying an Easter vaction. All the teachers except Miss Eldridge went to their respective homes.

Kind Thoughts Of Remembrance

Mrs. Gilbert O. Johnson went out to the home of Mrs. John Nybo on March the twenty seventh, with a present of $42.00 which had been given by good givers and friends. The sum had been raised by a subscription list, which Mrs. Johnson had circulated about town.

FOR FARM PROGRESS

The Agricultural Committee of the North Carolina Bankers Association, in conference with officials of the College of Agriculture, recently adopted the following program for active work in the state:

1. Aid county agents in determining definite objectives for each community and organize county in community groups to carry them out.
2. Give each county a definite objective through an organization of farmers, bankers, and business men.
3. Secure from state and federal sources assistance in determining definite objectives and in giving instruction to members of community and county organizations.
4. Organize bankers, merchants, and farmers where desirable into better marketing units.
5. Secure co-operation of State College in surveying agricultural conditions and giving instructions through its specialists in organization, farm management, production, and marketing.

The New York Bankers Association describes in a recent bulletin the campaign under foot to foster club work among boys and girls in the rural schools. Prizes have been donated by a number of the former presidents of the Association to be awarded to the children, the communities, and the banks interested in the work.

WORK, WORK!

SYNOPSIS. — Introducing "So Big" (Dirk DeJong) in his infancy. And his mother, Selina DeJong, daughter of Simeon Peake, gambler and gentleman of fortune. Her life, to young womanhood in Chicago in 1888, has been unconventional, somewhat seamy, but generally enjoyable. At school her chum is Julie Hempel, daughter of August Hempel, butcher. Simeon is killed in a quarrel that is not his own, and Selina, nineteen years old and practically destitute, secures a position as teacher at the High Prairie school, in the outskirts of Chicago, living at the home of a truck farmer, Klaas Pool. In Roelf, twelve years old, son of Klaas, Selina perceives a kindred spirit, a lover of beauty, like herself. Selina hears gossip concerning the affection of the "Widow Paarlenberg," rich and good-looking, for Pervus DeJong, poor truck farmer, who is insensible to the widow's attractions. For a community "sociable" Selina prepares a lunch box, dainty, but not of ample proportions, which is to be "auctioned," according to custom. The smallness of the box excites derision and Selina is heartbroken. But the bidding becomes spirited, DeJong finally securing it for $10, a ridiculously high price. Over their lunch basket, which Selina and DeJong share together, the school-teacher arranges to instruct the farmer, whose education has been neglected. Propinquity leads to mutual affection. Selina becomes Mrs. DeJong, a "farmer's wife," with all the hardships unavoidable at that time. Dirk is born.

Pervus drove into the Chicago market every other day. During July and August he sometimes did not have his clothes off for a week. Together he and Jan Steen would load the wagon with the day's garnering. At four he would start on the tedious trip into town. The historic old Haymarket on West Randolph street had become the stand for market gardeners for miles around Chicago. Here they stationed their wagons in preparation for the next day's selling. The early comer got the advantageous stand. There was no regular allotment of space. Pervus tried to reach the Haymarket by nine at night. Often bad roads made a detour necessary and he was late. That usually meant bad business next day. The men, for the most part, slept on their wagons, curled up in the wagon seat or stretched out on the sacks. Their horses were stabled and fed in near-by sheds, with more actual comfort than the men themselves. One could get a room for twenty-five cents in one of the ramshackle rooming houses that faced the street. But the rooms were small, stuffy, none too clean; the beds little more comfortable than the wagons. Besides, twenty-five cents! You got twenty-five cents for half a barrel of tomatoes. You got twenty-five cents for a sack of potatoes. Onions brought seventy-five cents a sack. Cabbages went a hundred heads for two dollars, and they were five-pound heads. If you drove home with ten dollars in your pocket it represented a profit of exactly zero. The sum must go above that. No; one did not pay out twenty-five cents for the mere privilege of sleeping in a bed.

One June day, a month or more after their marriage, Selina drove into Chicago with Pervus, an incongruous little figure in her bride's finery perched on the seat of the vegetable wagon piled high with early garden stuff. It was, in a way, their wedding trip, for Selina had not been away from the farm since her marriage.

As they jogged along now she revealed magnificent plans that had been forming in her imagination during the past four weeks. It had not taken her four weeks—or days—to discover that this great broad-shouldered man she had married was a kindly creature, tender and good but lacking any vestige of initiative, or spirit. She marveled, sometimes, at the memory of his boldness in bidding for her lunch box that evening of the raffle. It seemed incredible now, though he frequently referred to it, wagging his head doggishly and grinning the broadly complacent grin of the conquering male. But he was, after all, a dull fellow and there was in Selina a dash of fire of wholesome wickedness, of adventure, that he never quite understood. For her flashes of flame he had a mingled feeling of uneasiness and pride.

In the manner of all young brides Selina started bravely out to make her husband over. He was handsome, strong, gentle; slow, conservative, morose. She would make him keen, daring, successful, buoyant. Now, bumping down the Halsted road, she sketched some of her plans in large dashing strokes.

"Pervus, we must paint the house in October, before the frost sets in, and after the summer work is over. Then that west sixteen. We'll drain it."

"Yeh, drain," Pervus muttered. "It's clay land. Drain and you have got yet clay. Hard clay soil."

Selina had the answer to that. "I know it. You've got to use tile drainage. And—wait a minute—humus. I know what humus is. It's decayed vegetables. There's always a pile by the side of the barn; and you've been using it on the quick land. All the west sixteen isn't clay. Part of it's muckland. All it needs is draining and manure. With potash, too, and phosphoric acid."

Pervus laughed a great hearty laugh that Selina found surprisingly infuriating. "Well, well, well! School teacher is a farmer now, huh? I bet even Widow Paarlenberg don't know as much as my little farmer about"—he exploded again—"about this, now, potash and—what kind of acid? Tell me, little Lina, from where did you learn all this about truck farming?"

"Out of a book," Selina said, almost snappishly. "I sent to Chicago for it."

"A book! A book!" He slapped his knee. "A vegetable farmer out of a book."

"Why not! The man who wrote it knows more about vegetable farming than anybody in all High Prairie. He knows about new ways. You're running the farm just the way your father ran it."

"What was good enough for my father is good enough for me."

"It isn't!" cried Selina, "It isn't! The book says clay loam is all right for cabbages, peas, and beans. It tells you how. It tells you how!" She was like a frantic little fly darting and pricking him on to accelerate the stolid sluggishness of his slow plodding gait.

Pervus stared straight ahead down the road between his horse's ears much as Klaas Pool had done so maddeningly on Selina's first ride on the Halsted road. "Fine talk. Fine talk."

"It isn't talk. It's plans. You've got to plan."

"Fine talk. Fine talk."

"Oh!" Selina beat her knee with an impotent fist.

It was the nearest they had ever come to quarreling. It would seem that Pervus had the best of the argument, for when two years had passed the west sixteen was still a boggy clay mass, and unprolific; and the old house stared out shabby and paintless, at the dense willows by the roadside.

They slept that night in one of the twenty-five-cent rooming houses. Rather, Pervus slept. The woman lay awake, wept a little, perhaps. But in the morning Pervus might have noted (if he had been a man given to noting) that the fine jaw-line was set as determinedly as ever with an angle that spelled inevitably paint, drainage, humus, potash, phosphoric acid, and a horse team.

She rose before four with Pervus, glad to be out of the stuffy little room with its spotted and scaly green wall paper, its rickety bed and chair. They had a cup of coffee and a slice of bread in the eating house on the first floor. Selina waited while he tended the horse. It was scarcely dawn when the trading began. Selina, watching it from the wagon seat, thought that this was a ridiculously haphazard and perilous method of distributing the food for whose fruition Pervus had toiled with aching back and tired arms. But she said nothing.

She kept, perforce, to the house that first year, and the second. Pervus declared that his woman should never work in the fields as did many of the High Prairie wives and daughters. Selina learned much that first year, and the second, but she said little. She kept the house in order—rough work, and endless—and she managed, miraculously, to keep herself looking fresh and neat. She understood now Maartje Pool's drab garments, harassed face, heavily swift feet, never at rest. The idea of flowers in bowls was abandoned by July. Had it not been for Roelf's faithful tending, the flower beds themselves planted with such hopes would have perished for lack of care.

Roelf came often to the house. He found there a tranquillity and peace never known in the Pool place, with its hubbub and clatter. In order to make her house attractive Selina had actually rifled her precious little bank hoard—the four hundred and ninety-seven dollars left her by her father. She still had one of the clear white diamonds. She kept it sewed in the hem of an old flannel petticoat.

The can of white paint and the brush actually did materialize. For weeks it was dangerous to sit, lean, or tread upon any paintable thing in the DeJong farmhouse without eliciting a cry of warning from Selina. She would actually have tried her hand at the outside of the house with a quart can and a three-inch brush if Pervus hadn't intervened. She hemmed dimity curtains, made slip-covers for the hideous parlor sofa and the ugliest of the chairs. Subscribed for a magazine called House and Garden. Together she and Roelf used to pore over this fascinating periodical. If High Prairie had ever overheard one of these conversations between the farm woman who would always be a girl and the farm boy who had never been quite a child it would have raised palms high in an "Og heden!" of horror. But High Prairie never heard and wouldn't have understood if it had.

Selina was up daily at four. Dressing was a swift and mechanical covering of the body. Breakfast must be ready for Pervus and Jan when they came in from the barn. The house to clean, the chickens to tend, sewing, washing, ironing, cooking. She contrived ways of minimizing her steps, of lightening her labor. And she saw clearly how the little farm was mismanaged through lack of foresight, imagination, and—she faced it squarely—through stupidity. She was fond of this great, kindly, blundering, stubborn boy who was her husband. But she saw him with amazing clearness through the mists of her love. There was something prophetic about the way she began to absorb knowledge of the farm work, of vegetable culture, of marketing. Listening, seeing, she learned about soil, planting, weather, selling. The daily talk of the house and fields was of nothing else. About this little twenty-five-acre garden patch there was nothing of the majesty of the Iowa, Illinois and Kansas grain farms, with their endless billows of wheat and corn, rye, alfalfa and barley rolling away to the horizon. Everything was done in diminutive here. Selina sensed that every inch of soil should have been made to yield to the utmost. Yet there lay the west sixteen, useless during most of the year; reliable never. And there was no money to drain it or enrich it; no ready cash for the purchase of profitable neighboring acreage. She did not know the term intensive farming, but this was what she meant.

During that winter she was often hideously lonely. She never got over her hunger for companionship. Here she was, a gregarious and fun-loving creature, buried in a snow-bound Illinois prairie farmhouse with a husband who looked upon conversation as a convenience, not a pastime. She learned much that winter about the utter sordidness of farm life. She rarely saw the Pools; she rarely saw any one outside her own little household. The front room—the parlor—was usually bitterly cold, but sometimes she used to slip in there, a shawl over her shoulders, and sit at the frosty window to watch for a wagon to go by, or a chance pedestrian up the road. She did not pity herself, nor regret her step. She felt, physically, pretty well for a child-bearing woman; and Pervus was tender, kindly, sympathetic, if not always understanding. She struggled gallantly to keep up the small decencies of existence. She loved the glow of Pervus' eyes when she appeared with a bright ribbon, a fresh collar, though he said nothing and perhaps she only fancied that he noticed. Once or twice she had walked the mile and a half of slippery road to the Pools', and had sat in Maartje's warm bright bustling kitchen for comfort. Where was adventure now? And where was life? And where the love of chance bred in her by her father?

The two years following Dirk's birth were always somewhat vague in Selina's mind, like a dream in which horror and happiness are inextricably blended. The boy was a plump, hardy infant. He had his father's blond exterior, his mother's brunette vivacity. At two he was a child of average intelligence, sturdy physique and marked good humor. He almost never cried.

He was just twelve months old when Selina's second child—a girl—was born dead. Twice during those two years Pervus fell victim to his so-called rheumatic attacks following the early spring planting when he was often forced to stand in water up to his ankles. He suffered intensely and during his illness was as tractable as a goaded bull. Selina understood why half of High Prairie was bent and twisted with rheumatism; why the little Dutch Reformed church on Sunday mornings resembled a sanctuary to which sick and crippled pilgrims creep.

Selina had been married almost three years when there came to her a letter from Julie Hempel, now married. The letter had been sent to the Klaas Pool farm and Jozina had brought it to her. Seated on her kitchen steps in her calico dress she read it.

"Darling Selina:—

"I thought it was so queer that you didn't answer my letter, and now I know that you must have thought it queer that I did not answer yours. I found your letter to me, written long ago, when I was going over mother's things last week. It was the letter you must have written when I was in Kansas City. Mother had never given it to me.

"Mamma died three weeks ago. Last week I was going over her things—a trying task, you may imagine—and there were your two letters addressed to me. She had never destroyed them. Poor mamma . . .

"Well, dear Selina, I suppose you don't even know that I am married. I married Michael Arnold of Kansas City. The Arnolds were in the packing business there, you know. Michael has gone into business with pa here in Chicago and I suppose you have heard of pa's success. Just all of a sudden he began to make a great deal of money after he left the butcher business and went into the yards—the stock yards, you know. Poor mamma was so happy these last few years, and had everything that was beautiful. I have two children—Eugene and Pauline.

"I am getting to be quite a society person. You would laugh to see me. I am on the ladies' entertainment committee of the World's fair. We are supposed to entertain all the visiting big bugs—that is the lady bugs. There! How is that for a joke?

"I suppose you know about the Infanta Eulalie. Of Spain, you know. And what she did about the Potter Palmer ball. . . ."

Selina, the letter in her work-stained hand, looked up and across the fields and away to where the prairie met the sky and closed in on her; her world. The Infanta Eulalie of Spain. . . . She went back to the letter.

"Well, she came to Chicago for the fair and Mrs. Potter Palmer was to give a huge reception and ball for her. Mrs. P. is head of the whole committee, you know, and I must say she looks queenly with her white hair so beautifully dressed and her diamond dog-collar and her black velvet and all. Well, at the very last minute the Infanta refused to attend the ball because she had just heard that Mrs. P. was an innkeeper's wife. Imagine! The Palmer house, of course."

Selina, holding the letter in her hand, imagined.

It was in the third year of Selina's marriage that she first went into the fields to work. Pervus had protested miserably, though the vegetables were spoiling in the ground.

Selina had regained health and vigor after two years of wretchedness. She felt steel-strong and even hopeful again, sure sign of physical well-being. Long before now she had realized that this time must inevitably come. So she answered briskly, "Nonsense, Pervus. Working in the field's no harder than washing or ironing or scrubbing or standing over a hot stove in August. Women's work! Housework's the hardest work in the world. That's why men won't do it."

She would often take the boy Dirk with her into the fields, placing him on a heap of empty sacks in the shade. He invariably crawled off this lowly throne to dig and burrow in the warm, black dirt. He even made as though to help his mother, pulling at the rooted things with futile fingers, and sitting back with a bump when a shallow root did unexpectedly yield to his tugging.

"Look! He's a farmer already," Pervus would say.

So two years went three years four. In the fourth year of Selina's marriage she suffered the loss of her one woman friend in High Prairie. Maartje Pool died in childbirth, as was so often the case in this region where a Gampish midwife acted as obstretrician. The child, too, had not lived. Death had not been kind to Maartje Pool. It had brought neither peace nor youth to her face, as it often does. Selina, looking down at the strangely still figure that had been so active, so bustling, realized that for the first time in the years she had known her she was seeing Maartje Pool at rest. It seemed incredible that she could lie there, the infant in her arms, while the house was filled with people and there were chairs to be handed, space to be cleared, food to be cooked and served. Sitting there with the other High Prairie women Selina had a hideous feeling that Maartje would suddenly rise up and take things in charge; rub and scratch with capable fingers the spatters of dried mud on Klaas Pool's black trousers (he had been in the yard to see to the horses); quiet the loud wailing of Geertje and Jozina; pass her gnarled hand over Roelf's wide staring eyes; wipe the film of dust from the parlor table that had never known a speck during her regime.

Will Selina's energy and ideas transform the farm? Or will she succumb to environment?

ARTIC PROJECT LEAVES JUNE 15

Navy Planes To Join McMillian In Expedition To North Pole.

Washington.—Naval aircraft will attempt this summer to bridge the vast ice expanse that has so far shut out from human knowledge regions of the Arctic where a supposed continent has long lured the toilsome effort of man by sledge without an answer to his guess.

In an expedition headed by Donald B. MacMillan, who is returning north on his ninth voyage of exploration next June, naval pilots will bring their craft to the avail of man's struggle to map the mysteries of an area of more than a million square miles between Alaska and the North Pole.

Although not a government project, the plan has been approved by Secretary Wilbur and indorsed by President Coolidge, and also will have both the financial and scientific backing of the National Geographic society.

Thus having a private status, and differing in this respect from the project abandoned last year for a polar exhibition with the dirigible Shenandoah, the naval pilots to accompany the expedition will be granted an extended leave for the purpose.

Of these, Commander R. E. Byrd, will be one, with the others, of whom there will be at least two or three mechanics, still to be chosen from more than a score of applicants from both the navy and marine corps. Commander Byrd will be in charge of all flight operations. In charting the unknown regions, as well as the many other scientific undertakings projected, including high altitude temperature and weather observations, Mr. MacMillan believes more can be accomplished with the planes in two months than has been done in the last century.

Leaving Wiscasset, Me., about June 15, on a vessel already chartered, the expedition will make its way along the Labrador and Greenland coast up to Axel Heiburg land, at the northern point of which, probably 520 miles from where the ship will station, an attempt will be made to establish an advance flying base. From there the plans will venture over the unknown northwest in an effort to determine what exists there. Such land might be used for aircraft bases in flight routes from Europe to Asia.

U. S. COLONISTS QUIT BOLIVIA

Find Only Jungle and Malaria in South American Land.

New York.—The plan of former Representative William H. ("Alfalfa Bill") Murray, of Oklahoma, to colonize Bolivia with American farmers has struck a snag.

Some time ago the Bolivian government granted Murray 192,000 acres of land in the interior.

Returning from Bolivia Monday on the steamship Voltaire, William C. Ritner of Colgate, Okla., and Robert Gallentine, of Apache, Okla., said that the tract sold to them was jungle land and rocky soil in an unhealthy locality and far from any means of transportation.

Gallentine said Murray bought the land for 10 cents an acre and sold it for sixty.

Pittner and Gallentine became ill with malaria and got back to the United States through the help of American oil officials. On the ship their condition excited the sympathy of passengers who collected $674 to enable them to start anew in Oklahoma.

The farmers said that the other colonists were leaving and that members of Murray's family had suffered from the sickness that came upon the little band.

Frederick J. Stimson, formerly ambassador to Argentina, who was aboard the Voltaire, said he would report the matter to Secretary of State Kellogg.

Coolidge to Answer P[illegible]

Washington.—President Coolidge's reply to the Peruvian memorial with reference to the Tacna Arica arbitration award will be transmitted this week. Both the reply and the Peruvian communication probably will be made public under an arrangement between the two governments in order to clear up any public misunderstanding on the questions involved. Suggestions have been made that such of the Peruvian proposals for modification or amplification of the conditions of the plebiscite as are appropriate might be referred by the arbitrator to the plebiscitary commission for its consideration in supervising the registration and voting in the two provinces.

In no division of Belfast did an official nominee top the list, and only two had reached the quota on the first count whereas in 1921 their return was like a triumphant procession. With a solid block of county votes behind him, Premier Craig's majority is secure but for the first time he will have to face vigorous, unfriendly critics.

Read this Remarkable Testimony Regarding Results from Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Norfolk, Virginia. — "If you only knew how many women and girls have taken your medicine by hearing my testimony, it would seem wonderful to you. Every day and every chance I have I advise some one to try it. It was in June, 1904, when I had given up to never get well, that I wrote to you. My husband went to the drugstore and brought the Vegetable Compound home to me. In a few days I began to improve and I have often taken it since. I am now passing through the Change of Life and still stick by it and am enjoying wonderful health. When I first started with your medicines I was a mere shadow. My health seemed to be gone. The last doctor I had said he would give me no more local treatments unless I went to the Hospital and was operated on. That was when I gave the doctors up. Now I am a healthy robust woman. I wish I could tell the world what a wonderful medicine Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is. I will be only too glad to answer letters from anywhere. I wish all sick women would take it."—Mrs. J. A. JONES, 317 Colley Avenue, Norfolk, Virginia.

SENATE PASSES THE INTERIM BILL

Bill Emerges as Compromise —Governor Appoints Finance Officers.

A state government economy bill, carrying a budget and pre-audit system which affects all state departments, boards and commissions, went under scrutiny of lower house administration leaders, following its passage by the senate, 58 to 8.

The house formally will take up the bill as a special order of business. Amendment appeared to be certain. The house fight for passage of the economy bill be directed by Representative W. I. Norton, who just has recovered from illness began a few weeks after the 1925 session opened.

Emerges as Compromise.

The bill emerged after three days bitter fighting in the senate as a compromise measure, changed materially from the draft prepared by friends of Governor Theodore Christianson. Conflicting opinions came from leaders of the two factions, who had teetered on a one-vote margin in the senate fight, regarding the governor's power to control tax spending in the state under the terms of the senate bill.

"The Governor has complete control over tax spending, except in the purchasing and personnel divisions of the board of control, despite supervisory powers over the commission of administration and finance which is vested in the executive council," Senator C. H. MacKenzie, author of the original bill and its principal defender on the floor, said.

"We have amended the bill to limit powers of the governor by giving the executive council supervisory powers over the commission of administration and finance," Senator E. W. Cameron, one of the opponents of the original bill, said.

"This preserves the prerogative of elective officers and is a constructive improvement over the original bill."

The controversial point arises over amendments with which the bill was burdened. One by Senator A. O. Devold struck out the original department of administration and finance and shifted the centralized financial control to the executive council composed of elective officers.

Would License Aviators.

St. Paul — The house passed Speaker John A. Johnson's aircraft regulation bill, by a unanimous vote. The bill was the only one introduced by the speaker this session.

The bill, providing for the licensing and regulation of aircraft operators, and the inspection of commercial planes, came up on a special order carrying measures of a local nature, or to which no objections had been offered.

In addition to the passage of the Johnson bill, 19 other measures were adopted by the house, including a senate bill, authorizing the governor of the state to appoint a commission to be known as the "lumber jack memorial asosciation," and consenting to the erection of a statue of a lumber jack on the state capitol grounds.

This bill was sponsored in the house by Representative Merritt, of Aitkin, who explained that under the measure the state would not be forced to expend a penny, and that $25,000 would be spent in the erection of such a statue, such found to be contributed by various lumbermen in the state.

The senate committee on agriculture recommended for passage a bill that will authorize the issuance of $30,000,000 additional rural credit bonds. The measure already has passed the house.

The senate committee also recommended favorably a house bill setting up a system of district appraisers. The committee altered one section of this bill which provides that suggested loans exceeding 75 per cent of the total amount allowed by the rural credit law should be reappraised.

The senate public health committee, Thursday night, voted to kill, by recommending for indefinite postponement a bill introduced by Senator R. T. Buckler, Crookston, prohibiting drug stores from serving lunches or meals in connection with their regular business establishment.

Would Make Lobbyists Register.

Lobbyists would be required to register with the secretary of state under a bill introduced in the house by Representative Otto W. Kolshorn, of Red Wing. The bill which was introduced with the permission of Governor Theodore Christianson provides that any person acting as an agent or counsel for any corporation or association to promote or oppose any proposed legislation must register with the secretary of state or be guilty of a misdemeanor.

Tax Plan Bill Reported in House.

With objections lodged against passage of the Indiana plan bill, by only two members of the house tax committee the measure was recommended for passage. Under provisions of this measure the tax commission will have power to veto bonds issued by any city or municipality in the state following a hearing which may be called on the objection of ten tax payers. The bill further provides that all tax levies shall be made on a budget system, this budget being also subject to veto of the tax committee.

Traffic Bill Passes Senate.

After extracting the highway patrol section from the bill by a close vote, the senate passed almost unanimously the measure which revises traffic laws of the state and aims to place travel upon the roads on a "common sense" basis.

The provision in the bill which allowed the state highway commissioner to place patrolmen on the state roads was stricken because the Farmer-Labor group mobilized against it, and also gathered to their support some senators representing rural constituencies. The vote to eliminate the patrol feature, the main regulatory provision of the bill, was 29 to 28. The bill as amended passed with only two dissenting votes.

Among the provisions of the state highway traffic code bill as passed by the senate are:

State highway department or municipal authorities may establish arterial highways, and cars seeking to turn onto them from a cross street or to cross the thoroughfare must come to a full stop before proceeding.

All fines collected for violations of the traffic bill shall be turned into the state treasury instead of going into local coffers. This is designed to prevent local communities from setting speed traps which are operated by officers whose pay is based upon a percentage of the fines collected.

Nobody may operate car who is under 16 years of age.

No person shall operate, or halt, a vehicle on a public highway at a speed to endanger life and limb. The "halt" feature is new and is designed to expediate traffic.

SUSTAINING FOOD

Fletcher tells us that half the ills flesh is heir to are caused by improper mastication of food and the overindulgence in rich foods.

Statistics recently published on cancer state that the large proportion of sufferers from this dread disease are among the rich and well nourished. Even ten pounds of overweight is a menace to health. A decrease of a pound or two a week is a most simple matter. Cut down on the fats and sweets. Eat everything you like but stop eating after a reasonable amount has been taken.

Again, Fletcher says, if we cut down our food, one-third, we would be well nourished, live longer and feel better. It is such an important habit to form early, the one of well masticating the food. Begin with the two-year-old and the problem will be settled forever for that child.

Plenty of roughage, greens, brans, vegetables with a good deal of cellulose or woody fiber is needed to keep the bodily functions active. Fresh onions and lettuce should be a daily diet in any growing family; lettuce is rich in vitamins that promote growth.

Grated carrots added to any fresh lettuce salad, or served with a few chopped nuts and a bit of finely cut apple and a good dressing is a good one to serve often, especially when cooked carrots are refused.

A slice or two of crisp well-cooked bacon, a half-inch slice of toast, buttered with a generous amount of butter, an egg and a cup of coffee with a tablespoonful of thick cream, will make a good breakfast, if slowly masticated. A doughnut may be added for the thin person but is not necessary.

Going without a meal seems to be a good method for some people, but it is not wise to cut down on the food too rapidly at first, let the body adjust itself gradually to the change. In a few weeks the normal weight will be reached.

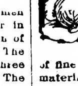
Gelatin is called a protein saver. It contains little nourishment, but with fruit and fruit juices adds to it mineral salts and flavor which make such desserts popular with those who are too heavy.

For those who are too thin, there is another problem. Plenty of butter, cream and eggs. Potatoes dressed with cream and butter and all easily digested foods are necessary. Especially valuable are the green leaves, lettuce, endive, and all green vegetables. Here, too, long mastication is necessary, so that the food may be properly absorbed and assimilated.

Add a teaspoonful of peanut butter to French dressing, smoothing it into the oil before adding the lemon juice or vinegar; it adds greatly to the flavor, if one likes peanuts.

Food That Is Liked.

A salad is always a dish to include in any luncheon menu, as well as dinner.



Cabbage Salad.—Cut a small, new cabbage into quarters, and let stand in ice water to chill; dry in a cloth, cut out and discard the hard center, then shred very fine; add a shredded green pepper freed from seeds and veins and a tablespoonful of fine chopped parsley. For a pint of material mix one-half teaspoonful of salt, one-fourth teaspoonful of mustard, the same of pepper, four tablespoonfuls of oil, and two tablespoonfuls of vinegar. Mix thoroughly. Garnish with bits of cooked beet and hard-cooked eggs.

Tomato and Onion Salad.—Peel and slice ripe tomatoes; peel and cut into thin slices one mild onion. Put the onion in the salad bowl and pour over four tablespoonfuls of French dressing; with a salad fork and spoon turn the slices of onion over and over in the dressing. Add the slices of tomato and turn them carefully in the bowl, to keep the shape; add some tender heart leaves of lettuce and serve at once.

Vegetable Salad.—To one-fourth cupful of French dressing add one tablespoonful each of finely chopped onion and parsley; mix thoroughly and pour over one-fourth of a cupful each of shredded cabbage, sliced celery and radishes, one-half cupful of cooked beets and carrots cut into small cubes. Toss in a salad bowl until well mixed. Serve on lettuce leaves.

Century Salad.—Slice a [illegible] or two, add sliced red pepper and chopped olives, with a bit of scraped onion. Serve with either a French or a boiled dressing.

Frozen Tomato Salad.—From a can of tomatoes take all the large pieces of pulp, press them through a sieve and season highly with salt, pepper, onion juice, and a little tarragon vinegar. Put this mixture in the freezer and freeze as for water ice. Take out the dasher, work down well into the can, repack and let stand for two hours. Chop, not too fine, a half cupful of walnuts and serve the tomato on lettuce sprinkled with the nuts and garnished with mayonnaise. Or pass the mayonnaise in a bowl.

"Why don't you eat?" the man asked him.

Luck in Finding Diamonds

The finding of the Cullinan diamond was, like many great discoveries, the result of an accident. The glance of an overseer of a South African mine was caught by a brilliant flash of light. He investigated and dug out with a pocket knife one of the wonder gems of the world. The stone in the rough was four inches long, two inches wide and weighed 3,024 carats. A poor Kafir boy found the famous Excelsior diamond, valued at approximately $4,500,000. The boy received a horse and cart and about $500 in exchange.

Testing Seed Corn Of First Impotanec

While it is good business to test all seeds before planting, it is more important to test seed corn than almost any other seed, says A. D. Wilson, Minnesota farmer and former director of the agricultural extension service of the university. This is so, he explains, because corn is harder to cure and to keep in condition to grow than is seed grain, and also because so little seed corn is planted to the acre that if an appreciable per cent of it fails to grow there is sure to be a poor stand and considerable loss.

Let's Get a 92-Scoring Butter!

It is very important to deliver your cream twice a week in order to get a 92 scoring butter.

All our butter is scored and inspected by the Government Inspector and whatever score he places on our butter is the basis on which the Creameries Ass'n makes payment.

Cream a week old will never make butter scoring 92 even tho it is sweet. Our biggest trouble is with old flavor which shows up in butter a week or so after it is made.

It is very encouraging the way our patrons have realized the necessity of delivering their cream twice a week yet some seem to think that as long as their cream is sweet it will make the highest grade butter.

Co-operate with us and you will get more money for your butterfat. In this way only we will get a 92-scoring butter.

VOL. XIV. HOLT, MARSHALL COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY APRIL 17, 1925 NO. 50

POTATO EXCHANGE TRUSTEES TO MEET

Important Decisions As To Handling 1925 Crop To Be Reached April 21

County trustees of the Minnesota Potato Growers Exchange will meet in St. Paul Tuesday, April 21. This group, consisting of 55 official representatives of the 33 counties which make up the state association, is the supreme governing body of the Exchange.

This meeting will be the last that is held before another election is held, preparatory to handling the 1925 crop. The Exchange is now closing out its first year of operation and, based on the experience it has had so far, a few changes in policies are being considered.

One of the most important matters which will receive attention is the question of pool periods. This year, the Exchange has had but one pool, which will not be closed until the final car is sold and accounted for. It is proposed to change this so that there will be three or four pool periods, thus enabling the organization to make final settlements more promptly.

County boards in every section of the state have been asked to hold a meeting before April 21, for the purpose of taking up with their local trustees special problems which they want presented to the state meeting.

Final checks in the organization's second pool payment were leaving the state office this week. The accounting department immediately began issuing checks for the first and second payments on all potatoes that were delivered after March 1.

Thus far, more than $600,000 has been paid to members of the Exchange.

Bad Beginning.

When a person begins with, "I don't want to hurt your feelings," stop him right there.

Standard Gauge.

The old coal pit tramways of about 100 years ago for which George Stevenson built his first "locomotive engines" had four feet eight and one-half-inch gauge, and that is still the standard.

FARMERS' FINANCIAL STATEMENT AS AN AID TO BUSINESS SUCCESS

By D. H. OTIS, Director, Agricultural Commission
American Bankers Association

D. H. Otis

Farmers, like other business men, frequently need to borrow money. Business men furnish their bankers with a statement. Why should not the farmer? In order to safeguard the depositors' money which he loans out, the banker needs full information regarding the borrower's financial condition. Many farmers are entitled to better credit standings which such credit statements will give them. These statements will also tell the farmer whether his business as a whole is a going concern.

It is not such a difficult task to make out a statement at least once a year. The first year will be the hardest. After that it will come easy. The statement should include the value of land and buildings, the value of the crops on hand at the beginning of the year, such as grain, hay, fiber crops, fruits and vegetables, etc. The statement should also include the number and value of the different classes of livestock, including horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, poultry, bees, etc.

It should also show value of crop machinery, dairy equipment, poultry equipment, harness, pleasure vehicles, power machinery, etc. Under other assets should be included cash on hand or in bank, loans receivable, accounts receivable, cash value of insurance policies, stocks and bonds, United States securities and other miscellaneous assets, not included in the above.

The financial statement should also list liabilities, such as mortgages, both real estate and chattel, notes due bank, notes payable to others, accounts or bills due others, premiums on life insurance, interest on taxes, etc.

The net worth may be determined by taking the liabilities from the total assets. If there are any contingent liabilities they should also be listed. These would include endorsements on notes of others, security or bondsman for others, leases or contracts, judgments or suits pending.

Other Information

In addition to the above, general information could be given on the cash value of life insurance assets pledged as collateral or insurance carried on buildings, insurance carried on livestock, insurance carried on machinery or implements, taxes for the year, cash received during the year and cash paid out during the year.

These various items can be arranged in tabulated form, and the figures indicating the amounts involved placed opposite each item. A copy of this credit statement should be preserved for use in making out next year's statement, and also for purposes of comparison when two yearly statements have been compiled. This comparison will give the farmer an idea as to how his business is going. It will be in the nature of an inventory, and will furnish abundant food for thought. If the practice is persisted in for a series of years it will be of untold value to the farmer in studying the business management of his farm.

Business men find it absolutely necessary to take inventory and prepare financial statements. Such practice has not been so general with the farmer. Here lies an open door of opportunity. The financial statement is the first step toward reliable farm accounting. Once the farmer gets started in making statements it will stimulate him to keep more records, to study more closely and minutely his business and to ascertain the sources of his profits as well as the factors that make up his expenses. When these are known ways will be suggested as to how to increase receipts and reduce expenses. There are both satisfaction and profit in following up from year to year these credit statements and the farm records that necessarily go with them.

Does Advertising Pay?

Advertising has made the Victrola Dog famous.

It has put Castoria down your throat, left bristles in your gums, and then came along with a Rubberset and took them out.

It has put Sozodent, Pebecco and Pepsodent on your teeth.

It has put a Gilette against your hayfield.

It has put Arrow collars around your neck and Ingersolls around your wrist.

It has jammed your feet in Holeproof sox, put Paris garters on your legs and Tiffany rings on your fingers.

It has worn out your jaws on Wrigley's and posted you on what to buy to cure corns, warts and bunions and ingrowing toenails.

Go anywhere you want to, do anything you wish, and advertising has had a hand in it—absolutely.

Doctor Advised Operation Friend Said Try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound First

St. Paul, Minnesota.—"I was all run-down from overwork and worry, had no appetite, could not sleep at night, and looked like a corpse. I have six children (five boys and one girl) and did not get any strength after my last baby was born. I was getting worse and thinner every day. The doctor said I had to go to the Hospital but this I could not do on account of my family. So I went to a friend of mine and told her what the doctor had told me and she said, 'Now do as I tell you. Try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as I have done. It helped me.' So I started taking the Vegetable Compound and I noticed after the first few bottles that I felt considerably better. After taking 9 or 10 bottles I got over my fainting spells. Everybody who sees me now notices the great improvement in my health. I am gaining in weight and strength and am feeling fine. Eat well and sleep good nights. Any woman can write to me and I will answer her letter." — Mrs. MARY WILHELMY, 309 Duke Street, St. Paul, Minnesota.

More Green Food Eaten

An increase in the United States of 400,000 acres of vegetables in 1924 as compared with 1918 shows that we are all eating more green food. The increase of lettuce from 16,800 acres to some 63,000 acres proves positively that our national appetite for salads is on the increase. Probably less meat and white flour and more salad and fruit will not injure our national digestion.

DEATH OF PERVUS

SYNOPSIS. — Introducing "So Big" (Dirk DeJong) in his infancy. And his mother, Selina DeJong, daughter of Simeon Peake, gambler and gentleman of fortune. Her life, to young womanhood in Chicago in 1888, has been unconventional, somewhat seamy, but generally enjoyable. At school her chum is Julie Hempel, daughter of August Hempel, butcher. Simeon is killed in a quarrel that is not his own, and Selina, nineteen years old and practically destitute, secures a position as teacher at the High Prairie school, in the outskirts of Chicago, living at the home of a truck farmer, Klaas Pool. In Roelf, twelve years old, son of Klaas, Selina perceives a kindred spirit, a lover of beauty, like herself. Selina hears gossip concerning the affection of the "Widow Paarlenberg," rich and good-looking, for Pervus DeJong, poor truck farmer, who is insensible to the widow's attractions. Pervus buys Selina's lunch box at the community "auction." Over her lunch box, which Selina and DeJong share together, the school-teacher arranges to instruct the farmer, whose education has been neglected. Propinquity leads to mutual affection. Selina becomes Mrs. DeJong, a "farmer's wife," with all the hardships unavoidable at that time. Dirk is born. Selina (of Vermont stock, businesslike and shrewd) has plans for building up the farm, which are ridiculed by her husband.

"You can't run far enough," Maartje had said. "Except you stop living you can't run away from life."

Well, she had run far enough this time.

Roelf was sixteen now, Geertje twelve, Jozina eleven. What would this household do now, Selina wondered, without the woman who had been so faithful a slave to it? Who would keep the pigtails—no longer giggling—in clean ginghams and decent square-toed shoes? Who, when Klaas broke out in rumbling Dutch wrath against what he termed Roelf's "dumb" ways, would say, "Og, Pool, leave the boy alone once. He does nothing." Who would keep Klaas himself in order; cook his meals, wash his clothes, iron his shirts, take a pride in the great ruddy childlike giant?

Klaas answered these questions just nine months later by marrying the Widow Paarlenberg. High Prairie was rocked with surprise. For months this marriage was the talk of the district. So insatiable was High Prairie's curiosity that every scrap of news was swallowed at a gulp. When the word went round of Roelf's flight from the farm, no one knew where, it served only as sauce to the great dish of gossip.

Selina had known. Pervus was away at the market when Roelf had knocked at the farmhouse door one night at eight, had turned the knob and entered, as usual. But there was nothing of the usual about his appearance. He wore his best suit—his first suit of store clothes, bought at the time of his mother's funeral. It never had fitted him; now it was grotesquely small for him. He had shot up amazingly in the last eight or nine months. Yet there was nothing of the ridiculous about him as he stood there before her now, tall, lean, dark. He put down his cheap yellow suitcase.

"Well, Roelf."

"I am going away. I couldn't stay."

She nodded. "Where?"

"Away. Chicago maybe." He was terribly moved, so he made his tone casual. "They came home last night. I have got some books that belong to you." He made as though to open the suitcase.

"No, no! Keep them."

"Good-by."

"Good-by, Roelf." She took the boy's dark head in her two hands and, standing on tiptoe, kissed him. He turned to go. "Wait a minute. Wait a minute." She had a few dollars—in quarters, dimes, half dollars—perhaps ten dollars in all—hidden away in a canister on the shelf. She reached for it. But when she came back with the box in her hand he was gone.

Chapter VII

Dirk was eight, Little Sobig [illegible] in a suit made of bean sacking sewed together by his mother. A brown blond boy with mosquito bites on his legs and his legs never still. Nothing of the dreamer about this lad. The one-room schoolhouse of Selina's day had been replaced by a two-story brick structure, very fine, of which High Prairie was vastly proud. The rusty iron stove had been dethroned by a central heater. Dirk went to school from October until June. Pervus protested that this was foolish. The boy could be of great help in the fields from the beginning of April to the first of November, but Selina fought savagely for his schooling, and won.

"Sobig isn't a truck farmer."

"Well, he will be pretty soon. Time I was fifteen I was running our place."

Verbally Selina did not combat this. But within her every force was gathering to fight it when the time should come. Her Sobig a truck farmer, a slave to the soil, bent by it, beaten by it, blasted by it, so that he, in time, like the other men of High Prairie, would take on the very look of the rocks and earth among which they toiled!

Dirk, at eight, was a none too handsome child, considering his father and mother—or his father and mother as they had been. It was not until he was seventeen or eighteen that he was to metamorphose suddenly into a graceful and aristocratic youngster with an indefinable look about him of distinction and actual elegance.

Selina was a farm woman now, nearing thirty. The work rode her as it had ridden Maartje Pool. In the DeJong yard there was always a dado of washing. Faded overalls, a shirt, socks, a boy's drawers grotesquely patched and mended, towels of rough sacking. She, too, rose at four, snatched up shapeless garments, invested herself with them, seized her great coil of fine cloudy hair, twisted it into a utilitarian knob and skewered it with a hairpin from which the varnish had long departed, leaving it a dull gray; thrust her slim feet into shapeless shoes, dabbed her face with cold water, hurried to the kitchen stove. The work was always at her heels, its breath hot on her neck.

Seeing her thus one would have thought that the Selina Peake of the wine-red cashmere, the fun-loving disposition, the high-spirited courage, had departed forever. But these things still persisted. For that matter, even the wine-red cashmere clung to existence. So hopelessly old-fashioned now as to be almost picturesque, it hung in Selina's closet like a rose memory. Sometimes when she came upon it in an orgy of cleaning she would pass her rough hands over its soft folds and by that magic process Mrs. Pervus DeJong vanished in a pouf and in her place was the girl Selina Peake perched a-tiptoe on a soap box in Adam Ooms' hall while all High Prairie, open-mouthed, looked on as the impecunious Pervus DeJong threw ten hard-earned dollars at her feet.

It would be gratifying to be able to record that in these eight or nine years Selina had been able to work wonders on the DeJong farm; that the house glittered, the crops thrived richly, the barn housed sleek cattle. But it could not be truthfully said. True, she had achieved some changes, but at the cost of terrific effort. A less indomitable woman would have sunk into apathy years before. The house had a coat of paint—lead-gray, because it was cheapest. There were two horses—the second a broken-down old mare, blind in one eye, that they had picked up for five dollars after it had been turned out to pasture for future sale as horse carcass. A month of rest and pasturage restored the mare to usefulness. Selina had made the bargain, and Pervus had scolded her roundly for it. Now he drove the mare to market, saw that she pulled more sturdily than the other horse, but had never retracted. It was no quality of meanness in him. Pervus merely was like that.

But the west sixteen! That had been Selina's most heroic achievement. Her plan, spoken of to Pervus in the first month of her marriage, had taken years to mature; even now was but a partial triumph. She had even descended to nagging.

"Why don't we put in asparagus?"

"Asparagus!" considered something of a luxury, and rarely included in the High Prairie truck farmer's products. "And wait three years for a crop!"

"Yes, but then we'd have it. And a plantation's good for ten years, once it's started. I've been reading up on it. The new way is to plant asparagus in rows, the way you would rhubarb or corn. Plant six feet apart, and four acres anyway."

He was not even sufficiently interested to be amused. "Yeh, four acres where? In the clay land, maybe." He did laugh then, if the short bitter sound he made could be construed as indicating mirth. "Out of a book."

"In the clay land," Selina urged, crisply. "And out of a book. That west sixteen isn't bringing you anything, so what difference does it make if I am wrong! Let me put my own money into it. I've thought it all out, Pervus. Please. We'll underdrain the clay soil. Just five or six acres, to start. We'll manure it heavily as much as we can afford—and then for two years we'll plant potatoes there. We'll put in our asparagus plants the third spring—one-year-old seedlings. I'll promise to keep it weeded—Dirk and I. He'll be a big boy by that time. Let me try it, Pervus. Let me try."

In the end she had her way, partly because Pervus was too occupied with his own endless work to oppose her; and partly because he was, in his undemonstrative way, still in love with his vivacious, nimble-witted, high-spirited wife, though to her frantic goadings and proddings he was as phlegmatically oblivious as an elephant to a pin prick.

Though she worked as hard as any woman in High Prairie, had as little, dressed as badly, he still regarded her as a luxury; an exquisite toy which, in a moment of madness, he had taken for himself. "Little Lina"—tolerantly, fondly. You would have thought that he spoiled her, pampered her. Perhaps he even thought he did.

That was Pervus. Thrifty, like his kind, but unlike them in shrewdness. Penny wise, pound foolish; a characteristic that brought him his death. September, usually a succession of golden days and hazy opalescent evenings on the Illinois prairie land, was disastrously cold and rainy that year. Pervus' great frame was racked by rheumatism. He was forty now, and over, still of magnificent physique, so that to see him suffering gave Selina the pangs of pity that one has at sight of the very strong or the very weak in pain. He drove the weary miles to market three times a week, for September was the last big month of the truck farmer's season. Selina would watch him drive off down the road in the creaking old market wagon, the green stuff protected by canvas, but Pervus wet before ever he climbed into the seat. There never seemed to be enough waterproof canvas for both.

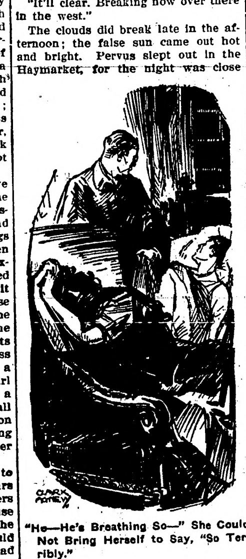
"Pervus, take it off those sacks and put it over your shoulders."

"That's them white globe onions. The last of 'em. I can get a fancy price for them, but not if they're all wetted down."

"Don't sleep on the wagon tonight, Pervus. Sleep in. Be sure. It saves in the end. You know the last time you were laid up for a week."

"It'll clear. Breaking now over there in the west."

The clouds did break late in the afternoon; the false sun came out hot and bright. Pervus slept out in the Haymarket, for the night was close and humid. At midnight the lake wind sprang up, cold and treacherous, and with it came the rain again. Pervus was drenched by morning, chilled, thoroughly miserable. A hot cup of coffee at four and another at ten when the rush of trading was over stimulated him but little. When he reached home it was mid-afternoon. Selina put him to bed against his half-hearted protests. Banked him with hot water jars, a hot iron wrapped in flannel at his feet. But later came fever instead of the expected relief of perspiration. Ill though he was, he looked more ruddy and hale than most men in health; but suddenly Selina, startled, saw black lines like gashes etched under his eyes, about his mouth, in his cheeks.



"He—He's Breathing So—" She Could Not Bring Herself to Say, "So Terribly."

In a day when pneumonia was known as lung fever and in a locality that advised closed windows and hot air as a remedy, Pervus' battle was lost before the doctor's hooded buggy was seen standing in the yard for long hours through the night. Toward morning the doctor had Jan Steen stable the horse. It was a sultry night, with flashes of heat lightning in the west.

"I should think if you opened the windows," Selina said to the old High Prairie doctor over and over, emboldened by terror, "it would help him to breathe. He—he's breathing so—he's breathing so—" She could not bring herself to say, "so terribly." The sound of the words wrung her as did the sound of his terrible breathing.

* * * * * * *

Perhaps the most poignant and touching feature of the days that followed was not the sight of this stricken giant, lying majestic and aloof in his unwonted black; nor of the boy Dirk, mystified but elated, too with the unaccustomed stir and excitement; nor of the shabby little farm that seemed to shrink and dwindle into further insignificance beneath the sudden publicity turned upon it. No; it was the sight of Selina, widowed, but having no time for decent tears. The farm was there; it must be tended. Illness, death, sorrow—the garden must be tended, the vegetables pulled, hauled to market, sold. Upon the garden depended the boy's future, and hers.

For the first few days following the funeral one or another of the neighboring farmers drove the DeJong team to market, aided the blundering Jan in the fields. But each had his hands full with his own farm work. On the fifth day Jan Steen had to take the garden truck to Chicago, though not without many misgivings on Selina's part, all of which were realized when he returned late next day with half the load still on his wagon and a sum of money representing exactly zero in profits.

Selina was standing in the kitchen doorway. Jan in the yard with the team. She turned her face toward the fields. An observant person (Jan Steen was not one of these) would have noted the singularly determined and clear-cut jaw line of this drably calicoed farm woman.

"I'll go myself Monday."

Jan stared. "Go? Go where, Monday?"

"To market."

At this seeming pleasantry Jan Steen smiled uncertainly, shrugged his shoulders, and was off to the barn. She was always saying things that didn't make sense. His horror and unbelief were shared by the rest of High Prairie when on Monday Selina literally took the reins in her own slim work-scarred handes.

"To market!" argued Jan as excitedly as his phlegmatic nature would permit. "A woman she don't go to market. A woman—"

"This woman does." Selina had risen at three in the morning. Not only that, she had got Jan up, grumbling. Dirk had joined them in the fields at five. Together the three of them had pulled and bunched a wagon load. "Size them," Selina ordered, as they started to bunch radishes, beets, turnips, carrots. "And don't leave them loose like that. Tie them tight at the heads, like this. Twice around with the string, and through. Make bouquets of them, not bunches. And we're going to scrub them."

Selina, scrubbing the carrots vigorously under the pump, thought they emerged from their unaccustomed bath looking like clustered spears of pure gold. Jan, by now, was sullen with bewilderment. He refused to believe that she actually intended to carry out her plan. A woman—a High Prairie farmer's wife—driving to market like a man! Alone at night in the market place—or at best in one of the cheap rooming houses! By Sunday somehow, mysteriously, the news had filtered through the district. A fine state of things, and she a widow of a week! High Prairie called at the DeJong farm on Sunday afternoon and was told that the widow was over in the wet west sixteen, poking about with the boy Dirk at her heels.

By Monday afternoon the parlor curtains of every High Prairie farmhouse that faced the Halsted road were agitated as though by a brisk wind between the hours of three and five, when the market wagons were to be seen moving toward Chicago.

Selina, having loaded the wagon in the yard, surveyed it with more sparkle in her eye than High Prairie would have approved in a widow of little more than a week. They had picked and bunched only the best of the late crop. Selina stepped back and regarded the riot of crimson and green, of white and gold and purple.

"Aren't they beautiful! Dirk, aren't they beautiful!"

Dirk, capering in his excitement at the prospect of the trip before him, shook his head impatiently.

"I don't know what you mean. Let's go, mother. Aren't we going now? You said as soon as the load was on."

"Oh, Sobig, you're just exactly like your—" She stopped.

"Like my what?"

"We'll go now, son. There's cold meat for your supper, Jan, and potatoes all sliced for frying and half an apple pie left from noon. You ought to get in the rest of the squash and pumpkins by evening. Maybe I can sell the lot instead of taking them in by the load. I'll see a commission man. Take less, if I have to."

She had dressed the boy in his homemade suit cut down from one of his father's. He wore a wide-brimmed straw hat which he hated. Selina herself, in a full-skirted black-stuff dress, mounted the wagon agilely, took up the reins, looked down at the boy seated beside her, clucked to the horses. Jan Steen gave vent to a final outraged bellow.

"Never in my life did I hear of such a thing!"

Will Selina sell every vegetable at a high price? Or will she come home in despair?

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

She Meant Well

A student brought his mother to the university and was showing her about. The dear old lady was anxious to make her boy think that she understood everything.

"Over there, mother," said the son, "are our wonderful polo fields."

"Oh," sighed the old lady, "what is there that is nicer than fields of waving polo?"

Unlucky

"I heerd tell this afternoon," said Mrs. Johnson upon her return from a neighborhood call, "that Mizzus Giggery cut her foot powerful bad whilst chopping up stovewood. Ain't that just too bad!"

"It shore is," replied Gap Johnson of Rumpus Ridge. "Pore Gabe won't have no wife to support him for a couple of months."—Kansas City Star.

PLAN NEW AIR MAIL SERVICE

Some Of New Links May Be Put Into Service This Summer.

Washington.—Opening of a number of new air mail routes linking some of the more important cities is being considered by Postmaster General New under authority of a law passed by the last congress.

Some of the new links will be put in operation probably this summer, in connection with the present transcontinental air mail service. Regulations under which contracts will be let for the extensions have been approved by postal officials and will be issued shortly.

With the beginning of the new fiscal year July 1, funds will become available under which contracts can be made for carrying mail by airplanes or airships on any routes selected, and numerous organizations already have asked for extension of the service to their cities. Only such routes as postoffice officials believe can be operated without loss to contractors, however, will be considered in the opening up of these new avenues of communication.

Extensions now under consideration include routes between New York and Boston; Chicago and St. Louis; Los Angeles and Salt Lake City; Elko, Nev., and Pasco, Wash.; Minneapolis-St. Paul and New Orleans; and Chicago and New Orleans via Indianapolis, Louisville, Nashville and Birmingham.

START COMMERCIAL AIR LINE

Detroit.—The Ford Motor company Monday inaugurated what is said to be the first commercial air line in the United States when the "Maiden Dearborn," an all metal monoplane, hopped off for Hegewisch, Ill., near Chicago.

The plane, piloted by Eddie Hamilton, a former British flier, is one of two duralumin planes to form the nucleus of an air service to link the Ford company here with its plants at Chicago, St. Louis, Mo.; St. Paul, Minn., and Iron Mountain, Mich. The second plane will receive its first tests within a few days.

The flight of the "Maiden Dearborn," marks the opening of a company operated airplane service which is to be extended gradually until several planes will be leaving here daily on regular flying schedules, the Ford Motor company announced.

For the present flights will be made chiefly over the Detroit-Chicago line, with landing at the Ford airport here and the United States mail airdrome at Maywood, Ill., a Chicago suburb.

"The line is to be operated exclusively for company business, and no outside business enters into the service," a statement said.

3 CHILDREN DROWN IN RED

Auto Plunges Off Bridge in River West of Perley, Minn.

Fargo, N. D.—Three children of Mr. and Mrs. Christ Heggeness, farmers near Gardner, N. D., were drowned when a new Ford touring car they were driving crashed through the railing on the right side of the Minnesota end of the Red river bridge, west of Perley, Minn., Sunday.

Two boys in the car were saved.

Bodies of Arthur, 13, and Mildred, 15, were recovered shortly after the accident. The body of Bertha, 18, who was learning to drive the car, has not yet been recovered. Herbert Heggeness, 11, and Arthur Rendsvold, 18, a cousin, were saved.

The young people had taken the car, which was only a few days old, for a short drive, presumably in the vicinity of their home, which is about two miles from the bridge on the North Dakota side. They drove to Perley. On the return trip Bertha evidently lost control of the car on the approach to the bridge, which dips and curves slightly to the left. The car went through the right side of the bridge and plunged about 15 feet into the river.

Counties Aid Bridges

Williston, N. D.—A total of [illegible] of county money has been made available for preliminary work in connection with Missouri river bridges here and at Sanish, through action of the commissions of McKenzie, Williams, and Mountrail counties. The McKenzie commission adopted a resolution authorizing $5,000 for the Williston bridge and $5,000 for the Sanish bridge for preliminary work. The Williams county commission authorized expenditure of $5,000 for the same purpose on the Williston bridge. The Mountrail county commission agreed to use $5,000 of Mountrail county money for initial work on the Sanish bridge.

A. T. & T. Plans Capital [illegible]

New York.—Directors of the billion dollar American Telephone & Telegraph Co. will ask the stockholders to authorize a $500,000,000 increase in capitalization at the annual meeting March 31, says the annual report of H. B. Mayer, chairman of the board. The directors recommend the authorization to provide for further growth, no new stock offering is contemplated this year. However, when its capital is increased the A. T. & T. may lay claim to being the largest corporation in the country.

The KITCHEN CABINET

Of all the men I have known, I cannot recall one whose mother did her level best for him when he was little, who did not turn out well when he grew up.—Frances Parkinson Keyes.

THINGS TO REMEMBER

When placing foods in dish on ice, place an old can rubber under them. This will keep them from slipping.

A wise cook will own two or three measuring cups; one may be used for liquids, another for dry ingredients, and save time.

All fruits not protected by a good covering like bananas, should be well washed before using. Any fruit, such as apples, oranges or grapefruit, when served whole or halved, should be well washed.

Washing silk stockings after each wearing will double their life, as the perspiration rots the silk.

A butter stretcher may be prepared thus: Add a cupful of fresh sweet milk to a pound of butter, softened so that the milk can be well worked into it. Use it very soon and keep in a cold place or the milk will sour.

A small peanut butter glass, with a lid, can hold so many good things for the children's lunch basket.

Wet stains of jelly or jam with spirits of camphor; iodine stains with ammonia, and tea stains will come out when washed, if sprinkled at once, while fresh, with salt.

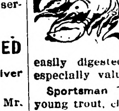
Clean velvet collars or hats with corn meal mixed until moist with gasoline. Rub in well, then brush out with a good clothes brush. It raises the nap of the velvet and cleans at the same time.

When making pastry, use two knives, cutting in the lard and butter until it is like corn meal. Handle as little as possible and have the water used very cold.

Turpentine, a few drops added to the boiler of clothes will whiten them. A few drops of turpentine on sugar, given when a cold is coming on, seems to heal the inflamed tract and relieve in a short time. A cold sore if touched with a drop of turpentine when first felt, repeated two or three times, will pass away.

When burning vegetable peelings or skins in the furnace, add a handful of salt; it will keep the odor from coming into the house.

Friday's Food.



It seems wise even in homes where the meatless day is not observed, to serve fish, as the markets will have at that time of the week the choicest kinds. In most communities fish is a plentiful and economical food. As it is easily digested and nutritious, it is especially valuable for the inactive.

Sportsman Trout.—Take two fresh young trout, clean, wash and wipe dry. Season well with salt and pepper and place in a narrow baking pan. Fill the pan with cream to cover the fish and bake until a light brown. The cream will make sufficient sauce to serve with the fish.

Bread Fritters.—Cut stale bread into thin slices, shape with a biscuit cutter, spread with jam and dip in the following batter, after putting the slices together as sandwiches. Sift one cupful of flour with one tablespoonful of powdered sugar, a pinch of salt and two-thirds of a cupful of milk, gradually add two well-beaten egg yolks. Add one tablespoonful of olive oil after folding in the stiffly beaten whites of two eggs.

Baked Stuffed Fish.—Prepare a stuffing for the fish using one-half cupful of bread crumbs, one-fourth cupful of butter, one-half cupful of cracker crumbs, a few drops of onion juice, one-fourth teaspoonful of salt, one tablespoonful of chopped parsley, two tablespoonfuls of chopped sour pickles. Bind with a beaten egg and stuff the fish. Lay in the pan two strips of cheese cloth; on this place the fish; this will keep the fish from breaking when lifted from the pan. Bake until the fish leaves the bones. Serve garnished with cress and sections of lemon.

Jellied Fish.—Cook a two-pound fish and remove the bones and skin, chop fine, add a little at a time a half cupful of cold water, a teaspoonful of salt and the juice of three lemons, one tablespoonful of grated onion and two dozen blanched and finely chopped almonds. When all have been well mixed add two tablespoonfuls of gelatin which has been softened in one-fourth cupful of cold water, and dissolved over hot water. Pack in a mold and when thoroughly chilled serve in a crisp nest of lettuce with mayonnaise dressing.

Peas, peanuts, pickles, [illegible] with a dash of onion, is a good salad to prepare in winter, as these foods are always to be obtained. Mix with a good boiled dressing and serve on lettuce.

Asparagus and Red Pepper.—Put two or three stalks of canned asparagus through a ring of red pepper or fresh tomato. Arrange on lettuce and garnish with a spoonful of mayonnaise.

First Salt Made in 1791

Louisiana has for years been a source of salt in the United States, the first crude refining having been done on a small scale in 1791 from the salt water springs in that state. The Indians found their salt in this way, however, long before the advent of the white man. In 1812 a more successful method was worked out. In 1862, under the direction of pioneer troops of the Confederate army, rock salt was discovered at Avery Island, just 15 feet beneath the surface of the ground.

Just as soon as a man acquires his ideal, he begins to look around for a superior one.

All our butter is scored and inspected by the Government Inspector and whatever score he places on our butter is the basis on which the Creameries Ass'n makes payment.
Cream a week old will never make butter scoring 92 even tho it is sweet. Our biggest trouble is with old flavor which shows up in butter a week or so after it is made.
It is very encouraging the way our patrons have realized the necessity of delivering their cream twice a week yet some seem to think that as long as their cream is sweet it will make the highest grade butter.

SOUND PRINCIPLES FOR ALLIED DEBTS

Payments to America Should Be Guided by Dawes Plan, Says C. E. Mitchell.

The fundamental principles of the Dawes plan for settling the European war debt question are applicable to the problem of the Allied debts to the United States, Charles E. Mitchell, president of the National City Bank of New York, declares in an article in the American Bankers Association Journal. Mr. Mitchell says:

"Debts between nations are always a source of international trouble, and I consider it of great importance that our own economic as well as political relations with such countries as France, Belgium and Italy may be improved by an early adjustment of their debts to our own national government.

Country Endorsed Dawes Plan

"I hope that we are gradually learning that such debts, if unduly forced, may result more calamitously to the commercial interests of our own country than to those of the debtor country. This talk of forcing payment of 'every dollar to the last penny,' is commercially unwise. I think we may assume that the Dawes plan has had the indorsement of the American people through their election of General Dawes to the Vice Presidency of the United States. That plan is one that establishes fundamental principles which may be applied in considering the debts of one nation to another resulting from war.

"The first principle, as I see it, is that the yoke of the war debt shall not be held as a burden upon the people beyond the generation that had to do with the war. This principle is clearly intimated in the fact that the industrial and railway debentures which form the principal security and means of payment of the debt carry 5 per cent interest with 1 per cent amortization, which means that such obligations are to be over a period of about thirty-six years.

An Invitation to Trouble

"Any attempt to force the carrying of such debt burdens to the second and third generations is but an engraved invitation to further trouble.

"The second principle is that the debtor country shall be taxed to the limit while the debt remains, but in no event to a point where its economic structure collapses under the strain, and, further, that the nationals of the debtor country shall in no case have a lesser burden of taxation upon them than have the nationals of the creditor country—another principle the soundness of which cannot be questioned.

"The third principle is that with such taxes collected, payments therefrom shall be made to the creditor country to such an extent only as they can be made without disrupting international exchange and commerce. The soundness of this last is apparent on its face.

"These I regard as the fundamental principles of the Dawes plan, and all of the hundreds of pages of the so-called Dawes report are devoted to setting up the machinery by which these principles can be put into effect.

"If these principles are accepted as sound then they must also be sound principles by which the payment of the debts of allied countries to us shall be determined, and we would best apply such a yardstick as our measure, rather than attempt to make popular the slogan of 'every dollar to the last penny.' In the adjustment of our foreign relations, essential to the development of increased export and import trade, there can be no problem of greater importance than reaching a sound and final conclusion as to this irritating question of the debts of allied countries to ourselves."

ADVERSITY A STIMULANT TO GOOD FARMING

An interesting experience is told by Dean Dodson of a Louisiana farmer who was just about breaking even in growing cotton. One day his wife fell seriously ill and was obliged to go to the hospital. A little later his daughter was also taken to the hospital. Before he was through with this experience he was confronted with a bill for $2,200. What was he to do?

Like a good business man he began to figure how he might increase his income and cut down his expenses. He had a few cows that he kept for raising calves. He started to milk these and sell the product. He had some cull potatoes that were unsalable. He fed these to his cows and some pigs which he was able to buy right. Other waste products were utilized in the same manner. In the garden he had more turnips than he needed for his own use. These he sorted, selling the best and feeding the poor ones. He consulted with his merchants as to what garden crops he might profitably grow for the local market.

He figured that he had some idle land that he might use in growing grain and hay. He enlarged his flock of poultry and took better care of it. He was more careful in the use of his auto and saved a considerable sum that ordinarily went for gasoline. By taking advantage of the increased sources of income and by cutting out unnecessary expenses he was able by the end of the year to pay off his hospital bill, and in the meantime had discovered the secret of sound and successful farming.—Banker-Farmer.

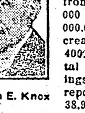
The Power Behind The Savings Dollar

By WILLIAM E. KNOX
President American Bankers Association

A recent compilation made by the Savings Bank Division of the American Bankers Association showed that in the six years since the war our total savings deposits have risen from $11,600,000,000 to nearly $21,000,000,000, an increase of some $9,400,000,000. The total number of savings depositors is reported at about 38,900,000.



William E. Knox

The full significance of this is realized only when we visualize savings deposits as meaning much more than merely dollars in the banks. They really mean an increase in the accumulated productive capital of the country, since money deposited in the banks as savings is promptly applied by the bankers in the purchase of securities by which plant, railroad and other industrial development is made possible. These figures mean, therefore, that the small savings of many millions of people, instead of being frittered away in the purchase of goods that are immediately consumed, which involves a destruction of capital, are gathered together and applied in the better utilization of capital through the upbuilding of industrial equipment. This means the preservation and perpetuation of the country's physical wealth and its application to the production of further wealth more easily and in larger volume, resulting in a higher standard of living for all classes in the country.

These tremendous savings figures indicate sound habits of thought and practice on the part of millions of people in their personal economic affairs. This is an asset of no small value in appraising our present business outlook. It is, in fact, one of the most promising elements in the situation today. It means that we not only have the resources for prosperity, but also enough common sense to make good use of them.

FORCING LOWER TAXES

Gerard B. Winston, Undersecretary of the Treasury in the American Bankers Association Journal says, "The burden of taxes must be lightened. Per capita Federal taxes rose from $32 in 1918 to $54 in 1920; then commenced to drop, and have been successively $45, $32, $28, $29 in the last four fiscal years. It is estimated that for the next fiscal year the figure will be about $27. With the states and municipalities the opposite tendency is disclosed. In 1918 their per capita tax was something over $20. In the next four years it rose to $27, $30, $36, $33, and later figures will undoubtedly show further increases."

He says of excessive death taxes that "examples have been cited of how the states and Federal government, under existing laws, can take more than 100 per cent of an estate if Federal and state governments take more than the particular source of taxation can stand. It will ultimately destroy all revenue from that source. After a man has provided for the reasonable requirements of living, the impetus to further production is largely the desire to leave one's family well provided for. So long as the individual feels that he can pay the tax and still leave an estate to his family, he will increase his efforts; but a man will not seek to build up a large fortune just to have it taken away from his family at his death."

STORE CREDIT COSTS 26 PER CENT.

In a survey of 800 farms made by the North Carolina Experiment Station, it was found that over 40 per cent of the total credit needs for the farmer is for short term loans, either through the bank or through merchant advances. Only one-sixth of this amount comes from banks and the rest from stores or landlords. For store credit farmers are paying over 26 per cent interest, and only a little better than half of the farmers realized this fact. The bank rate of interest at the same time was only a trifle above 6 per cent. Practically all merchants would be delighted to go over to a cash basis.

The remedy lies in the production of more food and feed and in the discontinuance of shipping in hay and grain with their attendant high freight rates and dealers' profits. This means the establishment of better working relations between bankers and farmers, for there is great opportunity for educating the farmer along the line of bank credit.—Banker-Farmer.

DIVERSIFIED FARMING VS. ONE CROP GAMBLING

Agricultural Director of the American Bankers Association Tells of Efforts to Solve Farmers' Problems.

One of the leading problems that is confronting many of our states is that of diversified farming, says D. H. Otis, Agricultural Director of the American Bankers' Association.

"During the past year the Agricultural Commission of the association has arranged for conferences in eight of the twelve Federal Reserve districts," he says. "At these conferences we have tried to get in touch with the agricultural needs of the respective regions and advise with the bankers and others interested as to what the banks might do to help in their solution. A resolution adopted in the Fifth District serves as an example of what is needed in many sections:

" 'Encouragement of a proper system of diversified farming in which farmers will grow as far as practical all the food and feed crops necessary for feeding the family and livestock of the farm, and to keep on the farms the requisite kinds and amounts of livestock best to meet the economic needs of farming in this district.'

"The conference in the Ninth District emphasized strongly the need of greater diversification. The farmer who raises nothing but wheat is unwise, even foolish. He is one of the worst kinds of gamblers, one who gambles on the weather, on insects, on drought, and various other things that affect the quality of the product. The farmer who raises wheat and along with it the other crops and keeps a reasonable amount of livestock has something to fall back on when wheat is plentiful and cheap. He is not putting all of his eggs in one basket.

Diversification for Contentment

"In many of the states the first step in diversified farming is to get the farmer to raise sufficient livestock to feed his own family. He needs to get a cow, sow and a couple of dozen chickens so that his own needs can be supplied without going into debt at the store. Livestock used to furnish food for the family will frequently consume large amounts of feed that would otherwise go to waste. Livestock enables the family to set a better table and live under more healthful conditions. More work is furnished to the family, making possible larger family income. If the farm family is producing enough to feed itself, there will be much more contentment and much less idle time in which to criticize the government.

"The Agricultural Commission is doing all in its power to encourage a sane system of diversified farming. The subject is being discussed at various conferences, articles and editorials are being published for the purpose of acquainting bankers with the importance of this work.

Bankers Are Assisting

"It is encouraging at these conferences to find that the bankers are incorporating the subject of diversified farming in their program and laying plans in every way possible to carry it out. To this end we have records of a number of banks who are putting up money to their farmers to purchase livestock. They are encouraging boys and girls to go into club work.

"For the coming year we hope to carry on this work in greater detail and as far as possible hold conferences with the officers and members of the agricultural committee in each of the respective states at the Agricultural College. We believe that in co-ordinating this work with the college we will reap the benefit of team effort. We are pleased with the hearty response we are receiving from the various colleges of agriculture and we believe that the opportunity is great for influencing various communities in better types of farming and in improved methods of business management."

Banker-Farmer Notes

Chambersburg, Pennsylvania, banks and Chamber of Commerce at the beginning of 1923 mapped out a vigorous program for the promotion of agriculture in the county. Throughout the year they assisted in keeping the farm organizations functioning and distributed to them agricultural bulletins and information of interest. They held rural community meetings and entertainments, exhibits of farm and home products, and advertised home products. One specific result was to induce a milk receiving station to locate in the vicinity, and during the first month $20,000 was paid the farmers for their milk. This marked the turning point in the farmer's business.

Just Like a Man.

Seeing that he cannot discard most of his bad habits, man seeks to [illegible] them.

THE REWARD

The individual banker should be much more than a mere lender of money, much more than a mere collector of interest. More than any man in his community, he has the opportunity to guide the farmer along lines of safe progress and toward substantial achievement. The banker in an agricultural district must know agriculture if he is to loan money to farmers and upon agricultural security. In addition to that, the banker is in touch with the activities of the business world. He has correspondent banks in the larger cities; he must, of necessity for the protection of his own business, look beyond the horizon of his immediate vicinity in order to foresee imminent changes in business conditions. The banker has the opportunity to be the point of contact between the farmer and these many other activities of the business world with which the farmer's business is so closely connected. The field is wide, the opportunity is great, the reward of confidence of one's patrons and neighbors—gained by service in their behalf—is worth the effort.—Walter W. Head, President American Bankers Association.

CO-OPS SELL A BILLION'S WORTH

According to the 1920 census figures, $721,983,639 worth of farm products was sold through co-operative marketing associations. The greatest growth in co-operative marketing has come since that time, so that it is safe to assume that much more than a billion dollars worth of products are sold co-operatively at the present time. A general survey shows that the larger co-operatives in fruit are handling nearly $200,000,000 worth of business annually. The large scale milk co-operatives do a total business of about $150,000,000 annually, while the tobacco group is doing a combined business of more than $100,000,000 annually. The cotton group has also passed the $100,000,000 mark.

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

ON PLAUSIBLE YOUNG MEN

"Isn't it dreadful about poor Mrs. Fuller, Aunt Emmy!" exclaimed Molly. "That company she bought those bonds in has failed and she has lost nearly every cent she had."

"Do you know how it happened?" asked Aunt Emmy. "She got a letter from some so-called 'investment house' she knew nothing about. She answered it and they sent a plausible young man to her and he persuaded her that the company he was selling bonds for was a seventh wonder. The carelessness of some people is really criminal. Mrs. Fuller might have gone to her bank, asked for reliable information and saved her money. Any bank has or can get the facts about business concerns showing their condition. Had she bought bonds in a company that the facts showed had been meeting its obligations for years, had a good surplus and good business prospects, she would not be in trouble today. Instead, she took the word of that plausible man who was either deceived himself, or who willfully deceived her, or at least was not so much interested in protecting her as in selling bonds to her. There is really very little excuse for the Mrs. Fullers of today because reliable information on financial matters may be had so easily."

"If she only hadn't put so much money in those bonds!" commented sympathetic Molly.

"That's another thing it is unwise to do," replied Aunt Emmy. "It is always foolish to carry all your eggs in one basket. Now if she had put only part of her money in those bonds instead of all she had, she could have stood the loss. As it is there is no telling what straits the poor little woman has got herself into. Like every one else Mrs. Fuller was too greatly tempted by the promise of a high rate of interest on her investment. Her extreme ignorance of finance coupled with the desire for high interest caused all her trouble.

"There are few things more dangerous than thinking you can do something you know nothing about as well as somebody who knows all about it. How foolish that sounds just to say it! Mrs. Fuller may be able to go to the butcher and because of her judgment of cuts of meat, get the very best and most for her money but that is no sign that she can judge securities. Buying bonds is no different from buying meat. You simply must understand your subject. You must know how to select good bonds, and you must know when to sell and when to buy. The only way you can do this is to take the advice of some one whose business it is to study the bond market. Any bank large or small will gladly discuss investments with its depositors. When you have learned enough to depend somewhat on your own judgment make your own decision as to what to buy,—then talk it over with your banker to make sure. Should he say, 'Don't buy,' abide by his decision."

"Mrs. Fuller's case has taught me a lesson, Aunty," said Molly, "I'll never take any chances like she did."

The total "deficit" was figured on a basis of $1,500 as a fair average return for such labor.

In the winter the number of visitors averaged around 300 a day and they were passed through in less than five minutes.

40 MILLIONS COVER APPROPRIATIONS

Appropriations Held Down To Figure Urged by Governor Christianson.

St. Paul—Legislative appropriations to opearte the state government during the next biennium period are headed toward a maximum of $40,000,000 or less, according to committee recommendations which have been made to the lawmakers.

The house appropriations committee submitted bills covering the appropriations for educational and state departmental purposes, the last two of the four general appropration measures, and a compilation of the figures reveals that up to date the recommendations are far below $40,000,000. Governor Christianson in his budget message to the legislature early in the session urged that the appropriations be kept within $39,000,000. Two years ago the appropriations totaled $42,182,669.

In the education appropriation bill which the house reported out, the total allowances are $19,662,042. The total of the state departmental bill is $8,643,329. The legislature already has passed, and Governor Christianson has signed, the appropriation bill covering all state penal and charitable institutions in charge of the board of control. This bill totals $7,148,350. The fourt appropriation bill, ocvering the aid of agriculture and semi-state activities, is being settled by a conference committee because the house and senate are about $50,000 apart in their figures. The house bill for this group of appropriations carries totals of $3,075.725.

Beauty Specialists Bill Passes.

Beauty specialists and barbers won their long drawn out fight for recognition in the house, when that body passed two measures affecting both factions. The beauty specialists sought enactment of a bill to regulate the occupation of the hairdressers and beauty culturists and also to insure better education of practitioners. The barber bill, passed without objection, places apprentices under the same sanitary provision as now prevails for regular licensed barbers. It also provides that women may secure a liecnse to bob the hair after one year of study, providing they can pass the state barber's examination.

Gas Tax Is Assured.

A gasoline tax, a reduced motor vehicle tax and a complete and ample financing program for highway construction were assured for Minnesota when the conference committee of both houses of the state legislature reached full agreement on measures recently passed by the legislative branches.

The conference determined on a gasoline tax of 2 cents a gallon, to be paid when the gasoline enters the state, effective May 1, but as a compensation to the state's motorists reduced the motor vehicle tax on all cars and granted a liberal reduction in the minimum tax on both class A and class B cars.

A gasoline tax of 2 cents a gallon will be imposed, effective May 1. It will not increase in 1926. The basic rate for motor vehicle taxation is reduced from 2.75 per cent of the value of the car to 2.4 pe rcent of value of the car. The minimum tax on class A cars is reduced from $12 to $10. (All perosns who paid the minimum tax this year will pay $2 less next year.) The minimum tax on class B cars is reduced from $15 to $12.50. (All persons who paid the minimum tax this year will pay $2.50 less next year.) Minnesota will have $6,000,000 for new road construction in 1925 and $7,000,000 in 1926. An additional $3,000,000 will be available this year and next year for a sinking fund to pay the county reimbursement bonds as they become due. Minnesota will receive full advantage of federal aid for road building, $2,100,000 for each of the next two years. The figures of $6,000,000 for new construction in 1925 and $7,000,000 in 1926, include the $2,100,000 which will be received each year from the federal government under the federal aid law.

Race Track Measure Defeated

Minnesota horse race followers must wait at least two more years before parimutuel machines can be used in connection with the race track sport.

Representative Guy E. Dilley, of St. Paul, lost his parimutuel bill after a hard fight in the lower house. The bill was defeated by a vote of 53 to 58.

The measure would have created a racing commission of three men appointed by the Governor. Betting on the races through parimutuel machines, which enable the public to make its own odds, would have been legalized. The state fund would have received 10 per cent of the money bet.

The omnibus game and fish bill is ready for the senate, having passed the house. The house first passed a one buck law amendment which would have permitted the taking of male, antlered deer during an open season every year. Later, it reversed itself through adoption of another amendment providing that buck deer may be shot only in even numbered years. The house also killed a clause providing that resident anglers more than 18 years old be required to obtain licenses at 25 cents each. Of the 32 amendments submitted, only a few were adopt

Ask Care of Indian Funds.

Steps looking toward the assumption by the state of some responsibility for the relief of Indians in Minnesota were taken when the state senate passed a bill providing for a commission to ascertain whether funds now held in trust by the federal government for the Indians cannot be transferred to the state.

"There is now held in trust in Washington about $5,000,000 belonging to these Indians," Senator A. J. Rockne said. "It is currently reported that when these funds are gone the Indians will have to be cared for by the state."

The bill merely provides for a commission of three, appointed by the governor, to negotiate with the federal authorities and report at the next session of the legislature whether the fund can be turned over to the state.

Highway Bill Is Amended.

The house amended the highway traffic code to provide for 20 patrolmen to police the state roads. The senate had already disapproved provisions for such a patrol system. The measure will go to a conference committee. As the bill came to the house from the senate it did not contain the patrol provision. Opponents of the amendment claimed that it would start a state police system. As adopted it provides that the commissioner of highways is authorized to appoint executive officers, division engineers, and regularly employed maintenance men or patrolmen of the state department. It further gives the highway commissioner authority to appoint not more than 20 additional men, who will be known as state traffic officers. The traffic code changes the speed limit to 15 miles an hour in congested city districts, 20 in residential districts and 35 on the highways. An amendment introduced by J. R. Masek, St. Paul, adopted by the house provides that any person driving a car while intoxicated shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. Any person convicted of driving a car while intoxicated will be prohibited from driving for three months.

A bill to allow the University of Minnesota to erect one dormitory costing not more than $500,000, for the housing of freshmen girl students, was passed by the house and sent to the senate.

PLAN CENTENNIAL EXCURSION

30,000 North Dakota Norsemen Expected At Minneapolis Festival

Fargo, N. D.—Thousands of North Dakotans of Norwegian descent will flock to the Twin Cities for the Norse centennial, June 6 to 9, at the Minnesota state fair grounds, at which the coming of the first real Norwegian settlers to America in the fall of 1825 will be celebrated, according to plans for this state, formulated under the direction of John J. Lee of Bismarck, chairman for North Dakota. Residents of the state are being asked to buy 30,000 tickets for the event.

Originated at a meeting of Norse societies in Minneapolis about three years ago, the huge celebration which 250,000 persons are expected to attend, will be woven around the fascinating story of adventure of the sloop "Restaurationen" which left Stavanger, Norway, on July 4, 1825, and arrived in New York October 9, 1825. Expeditions of the Vikings are said to have reached America centuries before the discovery of America by Columbus. Individuals and bodies of Norwegian adventurers also came to America during the early colonial period, some of them finally settling in New York. But the first actual organized immigration of Norwegians to the new world is credited to have taken place when the famous Norwegian "Mayflower" landed in 1825 with its 53 passengers.

SAY DIGGERS WERE FOOLED

Excavation on Farm Near Eau Claire Not Thought Cache of Loot.

Eau Claire, Wis.—Sheriff Victor Figlmiller said that he did not believe persons who made excavations near here, for $22,000 stolen in a St. Paul, Minn., bank robbery, as said to have been buried, obtained anything.

John Stivers, owner of Elk Creek inn, where the money is believed to have been buried in 1921, examined the excavations which were 20 feet long and 12 feet wide and five feet deep.

Judging from the extent of the excavations it must have been close to daylight when they went away without stopping to cover the place where the money was supposed to have been buried.

Stivers is not excited over the possible presence of a small fortune on his premises. "I agree with the sheriff," he said, "when he says that he does not believe the diggers got anything."

140 KILLED BY ASSASSINS' BOMB

Martial Law Is Proclaimed in Bulgaria---Sofia Is Aroused.

Sofia, Bulgaria.—Latest figures show that 140 persons, including 20 women and 10 children, were killed in the explosion of an infernal machine in the Cathedral of Sveti Kral during the funeral of General Georghieff Friday. Six generals and 30 other officers were among those killed. Martial law was proclaimed throughout Bulgaria as the result of the bombing outrage.

Sofia was in a state of ferment, the greatest excitement prevailing. With martial law proclaimed throughout the country, the military authorities have ordered a curfew established, the streets to be cleared at 7:30 p. m.

Although all the members of the government were present at the funeral service in the cathedral, none was seriously injured. Premier Tsankoff was one of those injured but was able to preside over the cabinet durnig its emergency session Friday.

General Georghieff, whose funeral was being held when the explosion occurred, was assassinated in the street here Tuesday night. The assassination closely followed an attempt upon the life of King Boris as he motoring near Sofia.

The bomb apparently was detonated by clockwork mechanism. It had been concealed under the roof in the southern part of the cathedral and spent most of its force upon the crowd in that part of the edifice.

The dead include the chief of police, a number of prominent citizens, among them, it is believed, a former cabinet minister, and Generals Davidoff and Nerzoff.

EMMA PAINTS GRIM PICTURE

London.—Emma Goldman, the onetime Communist, deported from the United States in 1919, told a London audience recently that the report of the British trade unionists who recently visited Russia, was "from beginning to end a travesty of the actual truth."

This report placed the situation in Russia in a most favorable light with reference to public health, housing and the prison system, and asserted that the soviet government was achieving remarkable results.

Emma Goldman, after her deportation from America, spent a considerable time in Russia, but eventually made her way out of the country and has since described Russia as a land of tyranny. She lectures under the auspices of a British committee for the defense of political prisoners in Russia.

She asserted that the soviet had used ever effort to hypnotize the delegates and make them take "stage mummery for reality." No one, she said, who went to Russia as an official guest was able to meet the Russian people or even remotely see what was happening to them.

The delegation's report on the contentment of the peasantry, she averred, was stultified by official soviet government papers, which revealed such discontent that the peasantry in the last three or four months had done away with 150 Communist officials in the villages. The new Communist policy in Russia, she said, was in the direction of strengthening the capitalist party, and not of fostering a world revolution.

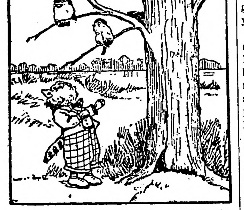
The SANDMAN STORY

MR. AND MRS. SPARROW

MR. AND MRS. SPARROW lived in a comfortable nest behind a blind on a house and they had never thought about living in a tree until one day Mrs. Sparrow, who never missed seeing anything that went on with her sharp black eyes, spied Mrs. Robin on her nest in the midst of the green leafy tree.

The wind was swaying the leaves and branches gently and as Mrs. Sparrow looked she thought how nice it must be to live in such a cool place. "It is just like a cradle for their children," she told Mr. Sparrow, "and I think I will take that nest next year and live in the tree."



A Big Puss Was Coming Straight for the Tree.

So when Mr. and Mrs. Robin had raised their family Mrs. Sparrow began to bustle about and talk of moving, but her husband told her she had better wait until spring.

"We are all nice and comfortable behind this blind," he said. "Why not stay here, and if you still care to live in a tree in the spring we can move then."

"Why, how you talk," said Mrs. Sparrow. "Of course, I shall want to live in a tree. It is much more genteel than living behind an old blind. Some one may close it any minute and let your nest tumble.

"I shall keep my wits about me, for if we don't watch out those robins will come flying back early and take that tree again for their home."

So early in the spring while Mr. Sparrow still shivered with the cold every time he flew from behind the blind, Mrs. Sparrow insisted that they move into the robins' nest.

"I would just like to see that pair get me out of this," she said as she nestled down into the nest, but I must say it will need quite a bit of repairing, but I shall stay right here, because if Mrs. Robin comes along she may take it instead of building a new one."

Mrs. Sparrow was right. In a few days Mr. and Mrs. Robin flew up and went straight to the tree where they had lived the summer before and there on their old nest sat Mrs. Sparrow, her black eyes snapping defiance at them.

"You fly right up there, Robin, and tell them that nest belongs to us. We built it last year," said Mrs. Robin, as she and her husband sat on a lower limb of the tree.

"No need to come up here," chirped Mrs. Sparrow. "You can't expect to have a home kept vacant for you, gallivanting all about the country as you do.

"We live in this part of the country all the year and why shouldn't we have first choice, I should like to know; so you can fly right along and find another place, for I am going to stay right here. Possession is nine points of the law, you know, and I have possession."

Just then Mrs. Robin whispered something to her husband and he replied: "You are right," and off they flew without another word to Mrs. Sparrow.

"Now I wonder what she told him," said Mrs. Sparrow, leaning out of the nest and looking around. "Something she saw that sent them off in such a hurry, I'll be bound."

Suddenly Mrs. Sparrow's eyes opened wide, for there was a big puss coming straight for the tree and looking up at it with her tail switching back and forth over her neck.

"My goodness, me!" exclaimed Mrs. Sparrow getting her wings spread for flight, "I do believe it is the cat that was a kitten last summer. I can't bring up my children in this tree. She would be certain to climb up here and—"

Mrs. Sparrow did not finish what she was saying. She flew straight and when her husband came to take one more look at the nest he liked so well he found his wife sitting there blinking at him.

"Changed your mind?" he asked.

"Yes," replied Mrs. Sparrow. "Wise people do, why not birds? That nest needed too much repairing for one thing and the other is there is a big cat prowling around."

And that was just what Mrs. Robin whispered to her mate, that the kitten which lived in the house last year had grown to be a big cat and she would not think of risking the lives of her children by living in that tree.

The Why of Superstitions

By H. IRVING KING

THE CUCKOO

IN ENGLAND, in fact in all northern Europe, numerous superstitions cluster around the cuckoo, where the bird is "a fortune teller, a weather prophet, a magical creature that can change into a hawk, an immortal and omniscient being." In this country, so far as the writer has been able to discover, there is only one superstition regarding the cuckoo. In some sections of the country—in Maine for instance—it is thought to be a warning of death in the family to hear a cuckoo sing near the house. Mrs. Bergen, in a note to a memoir of the American Folk-Lore society, thus accounts for the wealth of superstition regarding the cuckoo in Europe and the scantiness of it here: "The note of the American cuckoo is less peculiar and therefore it does not seem to have attracted much popular attention. Many intelligent people are unacquainted either with the appearance or the notes of the two specimens common in the Northern states." To which might be added that if it were not for the cuckoo-clock the great majority of us in this country would be entirely ignorant of the call of the cuckoo.

The cuckoo has had a reputation for magical qualities from the days of the Romans, and probably from before that time. As to the American superstition that the call of the bird near a house foretells death the same superstition exists in Europe and can easily be traced to the reputation the cuckoo has of destroying the eggs in the nests of other birds before taking that nest for his own purposes. It is an omen of death to the hatching eggs when a bird hears the cuckoo near his nest— his house. And so man, for this reason, came to associate the cry of the cuckoo near his dwelling with the same idea, an idea gliding naturally into a fixed and enduring superstition. And that all the more readily because of the general mystic reputation of the cuckoo.

"What's in a Name?"

By MILDRED MARSHALL

Facts about your name; its history; meaning; whence it was derived; significance; your lucky day, lucky jewel

JOYCE

IN ONE particular era in feminine nomenclature, names of gladness figured prominently. Joyce is one of those. It is not extraordinarily popular and it is not nearly so pretty as its French equivalent, Jocelyn. It signifies—sportive or merry.

Etymologists tell us that it comes from the French joie, which was meant to express an inarticulate shout of ecstasy. The original cry is preserved in the Swiss jodel or shout of the mountaineers. A number of feminine names have come from this happy source; among them the well-known Joy, Jadoca, which is frequent in Wales, and Jacosa still in common usage among the English.

Joyce came directly from this latter name. France took it but found it too British and evolved the musical Jocelyn.

The emerald is Joyce's talismanic stone. It is the gem of youth and springtime and hope. It is said to preserve for her the joyful legacy which her name implies. Thursday is her lucky day and 4 her lucky number.

THREAD WORMS

THESE troublesome parasites, also called pin worms or seat worms, or awl worms on account of the awl-shaped caudal extremity, occur occasionally in adults and frequently in young children.

They are small, round and white, occasionally in clumps or bunches, and found in the large intestine or the lower part of the small intestine.

By preference they choose the lower end of the large intestine or rectum for their residence.

They are occasionally found in the stomach and have been observed in the mouth, probably reaching it with the vomited contents of the stomach.

They are lively and active and frequently crawl from the rectum to the adjacent skin, sometimes appearing upon a child's clothing.

The female lays many eggs which must be swallowed by man or animal; they do not develop outside the body.

Within two weeks after the eggs reach the intestine they become full grown worms, not easily destroyed, and migrate toward the rectum.

The mature females then lay their eggs, which may be passed out of the body or remain and become a new colony of worms, this process continuing indefinitely unless they are expelled and exterminated.

The eggs are taken into the body with food or water or by means of infected hands.

There is no difficulty in detecting either the worms or the eggs, the ever-present symptom being intense itching which is very sleep-disturbing.

Other symptoms are irritability, and fretfulness, burning pain, restlessness, disturbance of the functions of the bowels and bladder, loss of appetite and anemia.

It is not unusual for sensitive children who suffer with these worms to have convulsions or St. Vitus dance.

No uncooked or partly cooked food should be allowed; the child's nails should be kept short; and the fingers must be frequently moistened with an infusion of quassia.

Castor oil, senna or epsom salts may be given at night, but not in excessive doses.

Every morning or every other morning, for two or three weeks, if necessary, an enema should be given through a rubber tube or catheter, which has been carefully introduced four or five inches into the bowel.

A pint of warm water, or soap and water, or boric acid solution may first be used to cleanse the rectum, this being followed by half a pint of 1 to 10,000 solution of bichloride of mercury.

Another excellent enema is an infusion of quassia, two ounces of quassia chips being boiled in a pint of water.

Other enemas frequently used are solutions of carbolic acid; turpentine, vinegar; sulphur, etc., but those which have been mentioned will usually be found efficient if employed carefully and insistently.

Finder of Leper Cure in Danger

Has Narrow Escape From Chinese Bandits.

Washington.—Within a few days after the United States public health service announced the release of lepers as "cured" by a treatment which included the use of chaulmoogra oil, word came from Joseph F. Rock, who located the chaulmoogra tree in Burma, telling of his narrow escape from Chinese bandits.

Mr. Rock was leader of the National Geographic society expedition to Yunnan province, China, which found blight-resisting chestnut trees for transplantation in the United States. After a few months in this country he returned to Yunnan to seek plant specimens for the Arnold arboretum, at Cambridge, Mass.

Mr. Rock spent one night in a dilapidated village temple, full of coffins. His native guard deserted him; outside the town the heads of native victims, captured some days before, were hanging from poles.

"From Tungchwan to Chaotung is five days' journey, and two days out of Tungchwan I had the most terrible experience of my life," Mr. Rock writes.

"With much misgivings I left Tungchwan. The first day passed without incident, but the second had much in store for us. After lunch, under an old walnut tree we made our way over the mountains with my 12 Nashi men, 20 mules, 40 soldiers, and all the followers who took advantage of my going and joined on for the sake of protection which the soldiers gave.

Robbers Pursue Caravan.

"We had not gone very far when my head muleteer came and said that robbers were behind the caravan. I waited for the mules to catch up with us, and as they came in sight I rode on, but not for long, as my boys yelled 'Robbers are coming' and at that moment they opened fire on us. My native soldiers behaved rather bravely, but we soon found that the brigands outnumbered us considerably and that the battle was to be a one sided affair.

"We pushed on under fire as best we could through a pine covered slope while the soldiers engaged the brigands; the latter pursued us and we retreated, all of us, soldiers included, under the fire of the brigands down a deep ravine which we had to cross and up the other side over a most terrible rocky trail. The firing continued the rest of the afternoon. Thanks to the bad aiming of the brigands we lost only one soldier. We reached the small plain of Yichesun on the edge of it being a small hamlet called Panplengal. As we reached the plain, I thought 'Thank God, now we were safe,' but alas, the brigands followed us, they looted the small hamlet, captured three soldiers with their guns, and while they were busy there we reached the village of Yichesun, where we had to stop for the night.

Brigands Chase Guards.

"Just as I arrived and passed through the dilapidated old gate (but no wall) there also arrived 35 soldier guards sent to us from Chaotung. As I was talking with their officer, one of the Tungchwan soldiers came running into the village to tell me that 200 robbers were only one and a half miles from the village and that they could not hold them back. I sent the Chaotung soldiers to help the Tungchwan soldiers, but soon they all returned with the robbers at their heels.

"I was quartered in a miserable old temple full of coffins in the center of the village. The brigands came to within half a mile of the hamlet where there was a large temple, and of this they took possession. Darkness came on. I never spent such a terrible night in all my life. At midnight the officers of the soldiers came and announced that the brigands were outside and that they could not hold the place and that they could not protect me. I had opened my trunks and distributed $600 in silver among my men, wrapped up some extra warm underwear, a towel, condensed milk and some chocolate, besides ammunition for my two .45-Colts. I sat fully clad waiting for the turn of events. Every minute I expected the firing to commence. The soldiers said that they could protect me but not my boxes and that the best thing would be to retreat and hide if the brigands rushed into the place. The people of the village began burying their few valuables and great excitement ruled the hamlet. It was a terrible wait and a long night.

"Outside of the hamlet were hanging from poles heads of brigands that had been captured some days before. I was informed that 600 bandits were outside the village and that capture was irresistible. I cannot tell you how I felt. However, at 4 a. m. they were still outside and no shot had been fired. At dawn there was no one to be seen. They had vanished."

Dog Plays Mother to Pair of Baby Tigers

Macon, Ga.—Two baby tigers born in the winter quarters of a circus here are being mothered by a huge bulldog. An animal trainer, knowing the custom of a tigress to slay its first born, took the animals from the mother and sought a dog. For, the trainer said, the dog is fond of this unnamed relative of the cat. The dog with two of its own puppies and the two tigers is being quartered in a hotel room.

WILL SEEK WEATHER DATA HIGH IN AIR

To Make Daily Flights to Study Conditions.

Washington.—Knowledge of hitherto unknown air conditions at high altitudes which will enable the weather bureau to make forecasts with more certainty and for a more advanced period will be made available to that office under arrangements completed with the naval air station at Anacostia.

According to the program, naval planes will make special daily flights carrying an aerological observer equipped with instruments to record the air temperature and humidity far above the earth. A naval aerologist schooled in weather observations and forecasts, will be assigned to the work. He will carry with him in the plane thermometers and barometers which will record conditions with mathematical accuracy.

Upon descent the officer will immediately transmit the data he has gathered to the weather bureau for use in daily forecasts and to army and navy aviation stations in and near Washington for their guidance in flying.

Temperature and humidity at great distances above the earth's surface have always given an element of uncertainty to weather forecasts and have made "long-range predictions" almost impossible. These elements in the upper air have a direct influence on weather conditions of the surface. With accurate information as to the conditions available the weather bureau is expected to establish a new record for veracity and farsightedness.

Famous Coast Whaler Becomes a Movie Ship

Los Angeles.—Conversion into a motion-picture ship will be the fate of the picturesque old barkentine, Narwhal, which for more than forty years was conspicuous in Pacific coast shipping, and whose romantic history over that period reads like the pages of old-time fiction.

The Narwhal, built at San Francisco in 1883, is one of the finest examples afloat of sailing-ship construction, in the view of the shipping men. Immediately after her launching she was entered in the whaling industry, in which she remained for many years. During that time she established many records, both in whale catches and fast cruises. After leaving the pursuit of whales, the craft was used for a number of years in the trade to the South seas.

The final voyage of the Narwhal ended last year when she crept into San Francisco harbor from an expedition to the South seas. On her outbound trip from San Francisco, the barkentine disappeared for a period of sixteen months and was recorded as lost at sea. She later appeared at a South sea port, however, bearing stories of terrific wind storms.

Shortly after casting anchor at San Francisco the Narwhal was sold at auction to satisfy claims, and the motion-picture interest that acquired the old-time whaler will move her down the coast to San Pedro.

Gets Electric Ray Fish That Could Stun Elephant

Danville, Va.—Dr. Russell J. Coles, tobacconist, whose hobby is deep-sea fishing, and who taught the late Theodore Roosevelt harpooning of devil fish, has presented to the Museum of Natural History in New York a giant specimen of the electric ray fish. He caught it off Morehead City, N. C. It weighed 120 pounds, and, according to Doctor Coles, had a sufficient charge to "stun an elephant." It was stranded near his boat, he says, by a receding tide. Members of his crew prevented it from regaining the sea. When dead the electric energy stored in what Doctor Coles describes as batteries near the head of the fish, was found to be negligible. It was placed in preserving fluid and shipped to the curator of the museum.

Send us the news, and we will do all we can to make this paper worthy of its name.

Above all, be a booster, not a knocker.

We notice that the Middle River RECORD has added this caption to its heading—"The Hub of Eastern Marshall County."

According to the maps, the centrally-located part of East Marshall County is Humboldt.

And that reminds us, Humboldt Hummers, get busy and send us the news.

Even if the RECORD insinuates that roads radiate from Middle River like spokes from the hub of a wheel, it must remember that all roads lead to Holt. Ask any resident of Holt—he'll tell you!

Bernard J. Mullany, Vice-President, Peoples Gas Light & Coke Co., says that the whole idea that there is an irreconcilable conflict between capitalists and labor is nonsense, when you analyze it.

"Even accepting the classification as made," he says, "Few of us will admit that we do not labor; and most of us are capitalists. It is one of the merits of this country that every person entering it by birth or by immigration is a potential capitalist. For all of us who own anything are capitalists; and that means practically everybody except those who live from hand to mouth and spend every penny as they go."

Conditioning the Farm Horse

Thousands of farm horses have been idle or roughing it during the winter months and are not ready for hard, steady work. It is now the season when the program of many a farm horse is suddenly changed without the preparation that is necessary for efficient service.

On many farms the horses have obtained their winter feed from stalk fields and the straw stack. They come through in a thin condition and need to be put in better flesh before ready for hard work. This is best done by gradually giving the horses in advance a portion of the same ration that is to be fed during the work season.

Whether the horse has been out in the open or standing idly in the barn, a moderate amount of light work preceding the rush season is advisable. The hardening process may be accomplished by changing horses each half day in doing the necessary hauling about the farm preparatory to working in the fields. This will exercise and strengthen the muscles without tiring them.

The horse will not perform efficiently in an ill-fitting harness. The raw sores that develop are due, in most instances, to plunging an idle horse suddenly into heavy work or to the fact that the harness is not properly adjusted. It is especially important that the horse collar be of the right kind, shape and size. A well-fitted collar does not choke and distributes the draft over the entire shoulder.

During the winter months most farm horses are groomed very little and the long hair of the winter coats is a handicap when spring comes. It is best to remove the old hair at once, by clipping. This is important as it increases the efficiency of the horse. It prevents the extreme sweating and lathering that would otherwise take place as the heavy work goes on and the weather becomes warm.

Due to the fact that the direct farm income is mainly from cattle, hogs, or sheep, the care of the farm horse and mule is generally neglected. It should be remembered that the income from the other classes of live stock depends upon the crops that the farm produces; and the horse furnishes the power that makes farm operations possible. More care for the work horse will in the end effect a saving and increase the efficiency on many farms. Be fair to the horse, by doing the things that will give him a good chance to give his best during the present season.

Wanted!

In order to make this the real home paper we need news of the home folks. Real, live news is always acceptable at this office. We especially want news that would come under the following headings:

Ringbo Rumbles
Humboldt Hummings
Goldenvalley Gleanings
Excel Echoes
East Holt Pickups
Doings Southwest of Holt.

Come on, folks! Make this the community news-box, and send us all the neighborhood affairs.

Take pencil and paper and jot down the news as it comes. Send your writings in on Mondays to insure their getting in the paper for that week.

Everybody is Invited!

Evidence of a Live Town

When people pick up a newspaper and see the names of scores of people in business in the town they decide that it is a live wire, but when they pick one which they have to examine with a microscope to find a home ad, it does not appeal to the stranger as being anything except a dead one.—Mt. Carrol (Ill.) Mirror Democat.

Take Notice!

All citizens of Holt are ordered to clean up their premises to conform with the Health Laws by the 1st of May, 1925. It is very essential to the health of our village that this be strictly adhered to. If the places are not cleaned up by the 1st of May the village can order the work done and charged against the owner of the premises affected.

Help us make Holt the cleanest little town in the state,

R. J. Lund, O. J. Backlund and P. L. Anderson were in Warren last Thursday to see the county commissioners about the bridge across the Thief River six miles east of Holt. We have a good road leading up to it, and all we now need is the bridge to carry the traffic from eastern Marshall county.

Success in business depends on infinite attention to detail; and it also depends on selecting a location where there isn't too much of that kind of business.

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

ON SAVING AND INVESTING

Aunt Emmy and Maud were talking about saving money.

"What does a savings bank do with the money people put in it, Aunt Emmy?" inquired Maud.

"It is invested in sound mortgages, perhaps, or government and corporation securities. You see, the men who run savings banks are trained financiers. They know what securities are good and what are questionable, so they invest the bank's funds—that is, the money they receive from their depositors—in the best securities in such a way that they will be able to pay you interest on your deposits and be able to return your money to you when you want it. In order to do that they must invest in securities that pay a higher rate of interest than they give you to cover the bank expenses and set aside a surplus against emergencies."

"But, Aunty, if the banks invest our money, why can't we invest it ourselves?"

"We could if we knew as much about investments as the bank does. Bankers are not likely to make the mistakes made by the ordinary person. They are not deceived by impressive looking stock certificates, plausible letters from brokers or charming voices over the telephone urging them to buy this or that. Your banker is a hard-headed business man who investigates thoroughly before he invests the bank's money. For this reason many conservative persons prefer to keep their savings in a savings bank, knowing that their money is in wise hands and that even though the rate of interest they get may be moderate their money is far safer than it would be if it were invested less skillfully."

"Surely, though, it must be possible to get more than 4 per cent on your money and yet be safe." Maud said.

"It is under certain conditions," Aunt Emmy agreed. "The trouble is that so few people are frank about their money matters with men who really can be trusted for advice. They would rather take the advice of a glib stock salesman. No matter how small a sum a person is thinking of investing, advice should be sought from a trust company or bank. Women especially don't seem to realize this.

"The savings bank is always safe. It is a good plan to keep putting money in the savings bank until you have a good sum. Then withdraw part and invest it in some security paying a higher rate of interest. But be sure to seek good advice before you buy. In this way you can always have some cash on hand in the bank, yet gradually convert most of your savings into high grade securities."—ANNE B. AYMES.

THE BURDEN OF GOVERNMENT

The financial burden of government has become increasingly heavy in recent years. It has, at times, reached the point of oppression. The Federal tax of 1920 aggregated more than five and one-half billion dollars. This year, after strenuous efforts to reduce the war-time peak, the total still exceeds three billion dollars—a sum far greater than the entire burden of funded debt accumulated as a result of the Civil War. State and local taxes have increased at an even greater rate. Taxation has become more than a problem; it is a threat of impending disaster.

Nor is the burden of government limited to taxation. We are oppressed by a multiplicity of restrictive laws and administrative regulations. It is estimated that there are over two million laws and ordinances in the records of nation, states and municipalities. One adult person out of every twenty engaged in business or industry is a government official, agent or employee.

In the face of this record, despite the general recognition of the overwhelming burden of government, we find ourselves constantly waging a defensive battle against plans and programs which would transfer still greater duties to government, which would hamper individual initiative still further, which will—if put into practice—crush individual ambition and destroy individual opportunity.

Under these circumstances it is our right—it is our duty—to affirm and defend sound principles of political faith as we have, on other occasions, supported sound principles of economic progress. The Constitution of the United States has stood for 135 years as the bulwark of our individual and our collective liberties. The Constitution has been and is now the greatest existing restraint upon an arrogant majority. It has been and is now the greatest existing defence of the very minorities which, at this time, are being led to denounce its restrictions.

One of our greatest needs is to repel the attacks now being made upon the integrity of this charter of our freedom. We should—we must—oppose vigorously all efforts to give Congress the power to override decisions of the Supreme Court—and thereby destroy the division of governmental power which is the inherent strength of our constitutional system.—Walter W. Head, American Bankers Association.

Let's Get a 92-Scoring Butter!

It is very important to deliver your cream twice a week in order to get a 92 scoring butter.

All our butter is scored and inspected by the Government Inspector, and whatever score he places on our butter is the basis on which the Creameries Ass'n makes payment.

Cream a week old will never make butter scoring 92 even tho it is sweet. Our biggest trouble is with old flavor which shows up in butter a week or so after it is made.

It is very encouraging the way our patrons have realized the necessity of delivering their cream twice a week yet some seem to think that as long as their cream is sweet it will make the highest grade butter.

Co-operate with us and you will get more money for your butterfat. In this way only we will get a 92-scoring butter.

"WHERE'S YOUR MAN?"

SYNOPSIS.—Introducing "So Big" (Dirk DeJong) in his infancy. And his mother, Selina DeJong, daughter of Simeon Peake, gambler and gentleman of fortune. Her life, to young womanhood in Chicago in 1888, has been unconventional, somewhat seamy, but generally enjoyable. At school her chum is Julie Hempel, daughter of August Hempel, butcher. Simeon is killed in a quarrel that is not his own, and Selina, nineteen years old and practically destitute, secures a position as teacher at the High Prairie school, in the outskirts of Chicago, living at the home of a truck farmer, Klaas Pool. In Roelf, twelve years old, son of Klaas, Selina perceives a kindred spirit, a lover of beauty, like herself. Selina hears gossip concerning the affection of the "Widow Paarlenberg," rich and good-looking, for Pervus DeJong, poor truck farmer, who is insensible to the widow's attractions. Pervus buys Selina's lunch box at the community "auction." Over her lunch box, which Selina and DeJong share together, the school-teacher arranges to instruct the farmer, whose education has been neglected. Propinquity leads to mutual affection. Selina becomes Mrs. DeJong, a "farmer's wife," with all the hardships unavoidable at that time. Dirk is born. Selina (of Vermont stock, businesslike and shrewd) has plans for building up the farm, which are ridiculed by her husband. Maartje Pool, Klaas' wife, dies, and after the requisite decent interval Klaas marries the "Widow Paarlenberg." The boy Roelf, sixteen years old now, leaves his home, to make his way to France and study, his ambition being to become a sculptor. Dirk is eight years old when his father dies. Selina rises to the occasion and, with Dirk, takes a truckload of vegetables to the Chicago market, to the amazement of her neighbors. The men at the Haymarket regard Selina as an intruder.

Selina turned the horses' heads toward the city. "You'd be surprised, Jan, to know of all the things you're going to hear of some day that you've never heard of before." Still, when twenty years had passed and the Ford, the phonograph, the radio, and the rural mail delivery had dumped the world at Jan's plodding feet he liked to tell of that momentous day when Selina DeJong had driven off to market like a man with a wagon load of hand-scrubbed garden truck and the boy Dirk perched beside her on the seat.

If, then, you had been traveling the Halsted road, you would have seen a decrepit wagon, vegetable laden, driven by a too-thin woman, sallow, bright-eyed, in a shapeless black dress, a battered black felt hat that looked like a man's old "fedora" and probably was. On the seat beside her you would have seen a farm boy of nine or thereabouts—a brown freckle-faced lad in a comically home-made suit of clothes and a straw hat with a broken and flopping brim which he was forever jerking off only to have it set firmly on again by the woman who seemed to fear the effects of the hot afternoon sun on his close-cropped head.

At their feet was the dog Pom, a mongrel whose tail bore no relation to his head, whose ill-assorted legs appeared wholly at variance with his sturdy barrel of a body. He dozed now, for it had been his duty to watch the wagon load at night, while Pervus slept.

A shabby enough little outfit, but magnificent, too. Here was Selina DeJong, driving up the Halsted road toward the city instead of sitting, black-robed, in the farm parlor while High Prairie came to condole. In Selina, as they jogged along the hot dusty way, there welled up a feeling very like elation. More than ten years ago she had driven with Klaas Pool up that same road for the first time, and in spite of the recent tragedy of her father's death, her youth, her loneliness, the terrifying thought of the new home to which she was going, a stranger among strangers, she had been conscious of a warm little thrill of elation, of excitement—of adventure! That was it. "The whole thing's just a grand adventure," her father, Simeon Peake, had said. And now the sensations of that day were repeating themselves. Now, as then, she took stock. Youth was gone, but she had health, courage; a boy of nine; twenty-five acres of wornout farm land; dwelling and outhouses in a bad state of repair; and a gay adventuresome spirit that was never to die, though it led her into curious places and she often found, at the end, only a trackless waste from which she had to retrace her steps painfully. But always, to her, red and green cabbages were to be jade and burgundy, chrysoprase and porphyry. Life has no weapons against a woman like that.

Down the hot dusty country road. She was serious enough now. The cost of the funeral to be paid. The doctor's bill. Jan's wages. All the expenses, large and small, of the poor little farm holding.

On down the road. Here a head at a front room window. There a woman's calicoed figure standing in the doorway. Mrs. Vander Sijde on the porch, fanning her flushed face with her apron; Cornelia Snip in the yard pretending to tie up the drooping stalks of the golden glow and eyeing the approaching team with the avid gossip's gaze. To these Selina waved, bowed,

"How d'you do, Mrs. Vander Sijde!"

A prim reply to this salutation. Disapproval writ large on the farm-wife's flushed face.

"Hello, Cornelia!"

A pretended start, notable for its bad acting. "Oh, is it you, Mrs. DeJong! Sun's in my eyes. I couldn't think it was you like that."

Women's eyes, hostile, cold, peering. Five o'clock. Six. The boy climbed over the wheel, filled a tin pail with water at a farmhouse well. They ate and drank as they rode along, for there was no time to lose.

The boy had started out bravely enough in the heat of the day, sitting up very straight beside his mother, calling to the horses, shrieking and waving his arms at chickens that flew squawking across the road. Now he began to droop.

"Sleepy, Sobig?"

"No. Should say not." His lids were heavy. She wrapped the old black fascinator about him. In the twilight the dust gleamed white on weeds, and brush, and grass. The far-off mellow sonance of a cowbell. Horses' hoofs clopping up behind them, a wagon passing in a cloud of dust, a curious backward glance, or a greeting exchanged.

One of the Ooms boys, or Jakob Boomsma. "You're never going to market, Mis' DeJong!" staring with china-blue eyes at her load.

"Yes, I am, Mr. Boomsma."

"That ain't work for a woman, Mis' DeJong. You better stay home and let the men folks go."

Selina's men folks looked up at her—one with the asking eyes of a child, one with the trusting eyes of a dog. "My men folks are going," answered Selina. But then, they had always thought her a little queer, so it didn't matter much.

She urged the horses on, refusing to confess to herself her dread of the destination which they were approaching. Lights now, in the houses along the way, and those houses closer together. The boy slept. Night had come on.

The figure of the woman drooped a little now as the old wagon creaked on toward Chicago. A very small figure in the black dress and a shawl over her shoulders. She had taken off her old black felt hat. The breeze ruffled her hair that was fine and soft, and it made a little halo about the white face that gleamed almost luminously in the darkness as she turned it up toward the sky.

"I'll sleep out with Sobig in the wagon. It won't hurt either of us. It will be warm in town, there in the Haymarket. Twenty-five cents—maybe fifty for the two of us, in the rooming house. Fifty cents just to sleep. It takes hours of work in the fields to make fifty cents."

She drove along in the dark, a dowdy farm woman in shapeless garments; just a bundle on the rickety seat of a decrepit truck wagon. The lights of the city came nearer. She was thinking clearly, if disconnectedly, without bitterness, without reproach.

"My father was wrong. He said that life was a great adventure—a fine show. He said the more things that happen to you the richer you are, even if they're not pleasant things. That's living, he said. No matter what happens to you, good or bad, it's just so much—what was that word he used?—so much—oh, yes—'velvet.' Just so much velvet. Well, it isn't true. He had brains, and charm, and knowledge and he died in a gambling house, shot while looking on at someone else who was to have been killed. . . . Now we're on the cobblestones. Will Dirk wake up? My little So Big. . . . No, he's asleep. Asleep on a pile of potato sacks because his mother thought that life was a grand adventure—a fine show—and that you took it as it came. A lie! I've taken it as it came and made the best of it. That isn't the way. You take the best and make the most of it. . . . Thirty-fifth street, that was. Another hour and a half to reach the Haymarket. . . . I'm not afraid. After all, you just sell your vegetables for what you can get. . . . Well, it's going to be different with him. I mustn't call him Sobig any more. He doesn't like it. Dirk. That's a fine name. Dirk DeJong. . . . No drifting along for him. I'll see that he starts with a plan, and follows it. He'll have every chance. Every chance. Too late for me, now, but he'll be different. . . . Twenty-second street . . . Twelfth. . . . Look at all the people! . . . I'm enjoying this. No use denying it. I'm enjoying this. Just as I enjoyed driving along with Klaas Pool that evening, years and years ago. Scared, but enjoying it. Perhaps I oughtn't to be—but that's hypocritical and sneaking. Why not, if I really do enjoy it! I'll wake him. . . . Dirk! Dirk we're almost there. Look at all the people, and the lights. We're almost there."

The boy awoke, raised himself from his bed of sacking, looked about, blinked, sank back again and curled into a ball. "Don't want to see the lights. . . . people. . . ."

He was asleep again. Selina guided the horses skillfully through the downtown streets. They were within two blocks of the Haymarket, on Randolph street.

"Dirk! Come now. Come up here with mother." Grumbling he climbed to the seat, yawned, smacked his lips, rubbed his knuckles into his eyes.

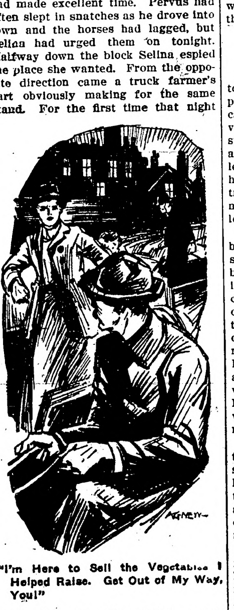
Soon he was awake, and looking about him interestedly. They turned into the Haymarket. The wagons were streaming in from the German truck farms that lay to the north of Chicago as well as from the Dutch farms that lay to the southwest, whence Selina came. Fruits and vegetables—tons of it—acres of it—piled in the wagons that blocked the historic square. Through this little section, and South Water street that lay to the east, passed all the verdant growing things that fed Chicago's millions. Something of this came to Selina as she maneuvered her way through the throng. She felt a little thrill of significance, of achievement. She knew the spot she wanted for her own. It was just across the way from Chris Spanknoebel's restaurant, rooming house, and saloon. Chris knew her; had known Pervus for years and his father before him; would be kind to her and the boy in case of need.

Dirk was wide awake now; eager, excited. He called to the horses; stood up in the wagon; but clung closer to her as they found themselves in the thick of the melee.

"Here's a good place, mother. Here! There's a dog on that wagon like Pom."

Pom, hearing his name, stood up, looked into the boy's face, quivered, wagged a nervous tail, barked sharply.

"Down, Pom! Quiet, Pom!" She did not want to attract attention to herself and the boy. It was still early. She had made excellent time. Pervus had often slept in snatches as he drove into town and the horses had lagged, but Selina had urged them on tonight. Halfway down the block Selina espied the place she wanted. From the opposite direction came a truck farmer's cart obviously making for the same stand. For the first time that night



"I'm Here to Sell the Vegetables I Helped Raise. Get Out of My Way, You!"

Selina drew the whip out of its socket and clipped sharply her surprised nags. With a start and a shuffle they broke into an awkward lope. Ten seconds too late the German farmer perceived her intention, whipped up his own tired team, arrived at the spot just as Selina, blocking the way, prepared to back into the vacant space.

"Heh, get out of there you—" he roared; then, for the first time, perceived in the dim light of the street that his rival was a woman. He faltered, stared open-mouthed, tried other tactics. "You can't go in there, missus."

"Oh, yes, I can." She backed her team dexterously.

"Yes, we can!" shouted Dirk in an attitude of fierce belligerence.

"Where's your man?" demanded the defeated driver, glaring.

The other, preparing to drive on, received this with incredulity. He assumed the existence of a husband in the neighborhood—at Chris Spanknoebel's probably, or talking prices with a friend at another wagon when he should be here attending to his own. In the absence of this, her natural protector, he relieved his disgruntled feelings as he gathered up the reins. "Woman ain't got no business here in Haymarket, anyway. Better you're home night time in your kitchen where you belong."

This admonition, so glibly mouthed by so many people in the past few days, now was uttered once too often. Selina's nerves snapped.

"Don't talk to me like that, you great stupid! What good does it do a woman to stay home in her kitchen if she's going to starve there, and her boy with her! Staying home in my kitchen won't earn me any money. I'm here to sell the vegetables I helped raise and I'm going to do it. Get out of my way, you!"

Now she clambered over the wagon wheel to unhitch the tired horses. It is impossible to tell what interpretation the dumfounded north-sider put upon her movements. Certainly he had nothing to fear from this small gaunt creature with the blazing eyes. Nevertheless as he gathered up his reins terror was writ large on his rubicund face.

"Teufel! What a woman!" Was off in a clatter of wheels and hoofs on the cobblestones.

Selina unharnessed swiftly. "You stay here, Dirk, with Pom. Mother'll be back in a minute." She marched down the street driving the horses to the barns where, for twenty-five cents, the animals were to be housed in more comfort than their owner.

She was back soon. "Come, Dirk."

"Are we going to sleep here!" He was delighted.

"Right here, all snug in the hay, like campers."

The boy lay down, wriggling, laughing. "Like gypsies. Ain't it, mom?"

"'Isn't it,' Dirk—not ain't it.'" The school teacher.

She lay down beside him, put one arm around him and drew him to her, close. And suddenly he was asleep, deeply. The street became quieter. The talking and laughter ceased. The lights were dim at Chris Spanknoebel's.

Selina lay looking up at the sky. There were no tears in her eyes. She was past tears. She thought, "Here I am, Selina Peake, sleeping in a wagon, in the straw, like a dog with its puppy snuggled beside it. I was going to be like Jo in Louisa Alcott's book. How terribly long it is going to be until morning. . . . I must try to sleep. . . . I must try to sleep. . . ."

She did sleep, miraculously. As she lay there, the child in her arms, asleep, peace came to the haggard face, relaxed the tired limbs. Much like another woman who had lain in the straw with her child in her arms almost two thousand years before.

Chapter VIII

It would be enchanting to be able to record that Selina, next day, had phenomenal success, disposing of her carefully bunched wares to great advantage, driving smartly off up Halsted street toward High Prairie with a goodly profit jingling in her scuffed leather purse. The truth is that she had a day so devastating, so catastrophic, as would have discouraged most men and certainly any woman less desperate and determined.

She had awakened, not to daylight, but to the three o'clock blackness. The street was already astir. Selina brushed her skirt to rid it of the clinging hay, tidied herself as best she could. Leaving Dirk still asleep, she called Pom from beneath the wagon to act as sentinel at the dashboard, and crossed the street to Chris Spanknoebel's. She knew Chris, and he her. He would let her wash at the faucet at the rear of the eating house. She would buy hot coffee for herself and Dirk to warm and revivify them. They would eat the sandwiches left from the night before.

As Selina entered the long room there was something heartening, reassuring about Chris' clean white apron, his ruddy color. From the kitchen at the rear came the sounds of sizzling and frying, and the gracious scent of coffee and of frying pork and potatoes.

Selina approached Chris. His round face loomed out through the smoke like the sun in a fog. "Well, how goes it all the while?" Then he recognized her. "Um Gottes!—why, it's Mis' DeJong!" He wiped his great hand on a convenient towel, extended it in sympathy to the widow. "I heerd," he said, "I heerd." His inarticulateness made his words doubly effective.

"I've come in with the load, Mr. Spanknoebel. The boy and I. He's still asleep in the wagon. May I bring him over here to clean him up a little before breakfast?"

"Sure! Sure!" A sudden suspicion struck him. "You ain't slept in the wagon, Mis' DeJong! Um Gottes!—"

"Yes. It wasn't bad. The boy slept the night through. I slept, too, quite a little."

"Why you didn't come here? Why—" At the look in Selina's face he knew then. "For nothing you and the boy could sleep here."

"I knew that! That's why."

"Don't talk dumb, Mrs. DeJong. Half the time the rooms is vacant. You and the boy chust as well—twenty cents, then, and pay me when you got it. But anyway you don't come in reg'lar with the load, do you? That ain't for womans."

"There's no one to do it for me, except Jan. And he's worse than nobody. Just through September and October. After that, maybe—" Her voice trailed off. It is hard to be hopeful at three in the morning, before breakfast.

> It looks like a case of make or break with Selina. Does she succeed or fail?

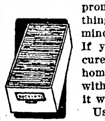
Charles Kingsley said: "Thank God every morning when you get up that you have something to do that day which must be done, whether you like it or not. Being forced to work, and forced to do your best, will breed in you a hundred virtues which the idle never know."

GENERAL HINTS

Put these in your card cabinet to use when occasion demands. We are all prone to forget just the thing we need, and a reminder is always helpful.



If you spill iodine, that cure-all kept in so many homes, saturate the spot with ammonia and wash it well.

Use the following spray for the small green bugs that infest the plants, sweet peas and rose bushes: Steep tobacco leaves and use the liquid as a spray. Save cigar stubs, or get the strippings from a cigar factory if one is near.

A famous cholera cure: Mix together one-fourth of a teaspoonful of soda, the same of ginger, and fifteen drops of peppermint; add to a glass of hot water and take a glass every three hours until relieved.

A splendid lotion for tan: Save the whey from cottage cheese, and in this cook a good-sized cucumber cut into slices, peeling and all. Let stand until cool, strain, add a teaspoonful of benzoin, two drops of oil of rose, and a tablespoonful of alcohol. There should be a cupful of the whey and cucumber juice.

Preparing a balanced ration means some thinking and studying of food values, but such knowledge is easy to acquire, if the desire is there.

The season, climate, occupation, condition of health and age must all be considered in determining the food for an individual.

Baked potatoes with creamed codfish is a dish which most like, and will enjoy again and again.

Bits of bacon added to a white sauce and served with poached eggs is a nice change from the usual method of serving poached eggs.

Bless the good Englishman who said, "we would better be without noses than without onions."

To those who will not have any of the flavor in a dish, we can but feel sorry, for many dishes are simply flat, stale and unprofitable without a bit of onion flavor.

When buying grapefruit or oranges, weigh them in the hand. The heavier they are the more full of juice.

Carry a few sheets of asbestos paper with you when camping, it makes (when rolled into cone-shaped dishes, set point down into coals and ashes) good receptacles to cook vegetables or anything to be baked.

A fine shampoo for dark hair is a well-beaten egg yolk. Rinse in several waters, adding lemon juice and a few drops of perfume. The natural oil of the hair retains the odor for days.

A little lye is a great convenience in any household. The convenient can should be kept where it can be often used. Drop a bit into a pan which has burned-on food. Add a small pinch to the white clothes when boiling, but be sure to rinse them well. Pour a solution down the sink drain often to keep the drain pipes clean.

Food Everybody Likes.

It will be a glad day when the coming generation of young Americans are trained to eat and enjoy all kinds of good food. There will always be degrees of enjoyment, as some things are liked better than others, but when he find a fussy finical eater, it is more often from bad training than from any other cause—if he is well and normal.

Raisin Pie de Luxe.—Line a medium-sized pie plate with a good pastry. Cook together one cupful of brown sugar, two tablespoonfuls of water mixed with three tablespoonfuls of cornstarch, the rind of two lemons and one orange, one and one-fourth cupfuls of water and two cupfuls of raisins. When the starch is well cooked add the juice of the lemons and orange and one cupful of walnut meats chopped, not too fine. Fill the pastry-lined plate, cover with an upper crust and bake until well-browned, at least thirty minutes.

Stuffed Celery.—Take white, tender, short stalks of celery, wash and wipe dry and fill with a cream cheese well-seasoned. One may use any of the cream cheeses. The stalks may be cut into half-inch lengths and arranged on lettuce. Serve with a French dressing. If the stalks are left with the delicate white leaves on, arrange around a mound of salted nuts, with the leaves forming a fringe around the plate.

Stewed Ducks With Turnip.—Cut up the duck and brown in butter with two onions chopped fine. When brown add an inch square of chopped ham, six turnips sliced thin and a tablespoonful of flour. Stir and cook, adding bay leaf, garlic, thyme and parsley; cook fifteen minutes, then add water and simmer until the ducks are tender.

REDS BOMB SOFIA CHURCH; KILL 140

Six Bulgarian Generals and 30 Women and Children Die In Cathedral.

Sofia, Bulgaria—140 persons, including 20 women and 10 children, were killed in the explosion of an infernal machine in the cathedral of Sveti Kral during the funeral of General Georghieff. Six generals and 30 other officers were among those killed.

In addition to the large number of fatalities it is estimated that about 200 persons were wounded.

Sofia was in a state of ferment, the greatest excitement prevailing. Martial law has been proclaimed throughout the Country, while the military authorities have ordered a curfew established, the streets to be cleared at 7:30 p. m.

Charge Communist Revolt Plot.

Within the last few days the authorities announced they had seized documents showing that an armed revolt was planned for this spring. Communists and anarchists have been reported to be unusually active.

These dispatches stated that the revolution was to start in northwestern Bulgaria April 15. According to the plans as reported, a campaign of assassination was to be carried out and every effort was to be made to establish a Soviet republic.

An attempt was made to assassinate King Boris as he was motoring near Sofia and the king narrowly escaped death. That night General Georghieff was assassinated in the streets of the capital. These attacks were the culmination of a long series of disturbances which have distressed the country and developed into a national crisis.

DEFENDS SALE OF LINERS

Answer in Injunction Suit Declares Dollar Line Bid Was Highest.

Washington—A defense of the action of the shipping board in awarding the five President ships of the Calif-Orient line by sale to the Dollar interests was filed in the District of Columbia supreme court.

The answer to injunction proceedings brought by the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. to halt the sale challenged the jurisdiction of the court and its power to review discretionary acts of the board as determined by majority vote and declared the Dollar interests bid was the best one received.

The answer alleged that at one time ships operated in the Orient trade by the Pacific Mail had been disposed of to enterprises controlled by foreign interests.

PAINLEVE HEADS FRENCH CABINET

President of House Agrees To Form Cabinet To Succeed Herriot Government.

Paris—After arduous negotiations Paul Painleve completed his cabinet, and sent notification to President Doumergue, that he had succeeded in constituting a ministry, where Briand had failed. So difficult were the last hours of the task that hope had almost been abandoned of reaching an agreement. But, in addition to forming the ministry, an accord also was found on the ministerial program. This includes plans for a settlement of war debts with the United States and Britain.

Paris—Former Premier Paul Painleve undertook the task of forming a cabinet to succeed the Herriot ministry. He notified President Doumergue that he would accept the invitation and at once set about the effort to get together the ministry that would command a parliamentary majority.

It was at first believed that M. Painleve would have his task simplified, or at least made more clear, by willingness on the part of the Socialists, a vital group in support of the ministry he intended forming, to allow members of their party to enter the new cabinet. Announcement to this effect was made.

Joseph Caillaux, former premier who recently re-entered politics after his rehabilitation by the amnesty act, will arrive in Paris from his country home, according to reports in the chamber of deputies.

AIRSHIP BLOWN OUT TO SEA

British Aircraft Torn From Mooring by Storm, Battles Winds.

London—The giant British dirigible R-33, which was recently recommissioned for the first time since 1921, broke from her mooring mast at Pulham with 20 men aboard.

The runaway airship was located by wireless in the neighborhood of Terschelling, an island of the Netherlands in the North sea, off the province of Friesland, according to an Amsterdam report received from an airdrome in the vicinity.

Shortly after breaking away from its mooring the dirigible appeared over Lowestoft, driving ahead of a fierce southwester. A big rip in her nose was plainly visible.

CAILLAUX ASSAILANT JAILED

Paris War Cripple, Threatens New Cabinet Official.

Paris—Antoine Damesin, a war cripple, was arrested in front of the ministry of foreign affairs, where M. Painleve has been conducting conferences with M. Caillaux and others.

Damesin told the police that he had gone there "to kill Caillaux, who is an assassin."

M. Caillaux recently was granted amnesty for alleged war time commerce with the enemy.

When asked how he proposed to achieve his object, Damesin drew a loaded revolver and handed it over to his captors.

The Painleve-Caillaux-Briand ministerial combination which popped to the surface suddenly to the exclusion of the proposed Painleve-Herriot cabinet, is having difficulty.

MANY HOUSEKEEPERS TOO ILL TO WORK
How Many Are Finding Relief from Weakness and Pain. Mrs. Brandenburg a Notable Case
MRS. EMIL O. BRANDENBURG
651 37TH STREET, MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN
Milwaukee, Wisconsin.—"I was in a badly run-down condition and I would get weak spells and terrible headaches. I felt so badly last year that I could not do any housecleaning. The minute I would lift or stoop it seemed as if I was going to fall to pieces. I told a neighbor how I felt and she said that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was surely the right thing for me. I took four bottles then and in the fall of the year I took three. I had been treated by a doctor, but he gave me an iron tonic and that did not help me. It seemed that the tonic did not have in it what the Vegetable Compound did. That gave me the strength and ambition I needed and I have gained in weight. This year before I started to clean house I got four bottles of the Vegetable Compound and am taking it right along. I tell all my friends about it and how much good it does me. They can notice it because I have gained in weight. I weigh 118 now and do all my work myself again."—Mrs. EMIL O. BRANDENBURG, 651 37th Street, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.
Mrs. Earl's Recovery
Horace, Nebraska.—"I had terrible pains and backache, so bad that I could hardly move, and I would have to lie down at times. I read advertisements of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I was so sick that I thought I would try it. My husband knew it was good as he knew a woman it had helped. It took all my pains away and I don't have any backache now. I do my own housework, take care of a few chickens and my garden, and have a little girl three years old to look out for. I recommend the Vegetable Compound to my friends and I will answer all the questions I can, if any one writes to me."—Mrs. ADA EARL, Box 28, Horace, Nebraska.

Glad It Was a Girl

A Franklin couple had been awaiting the coming of the stork, anticipating the arrival of a boy. When the wonderful bird arrived it left a baby girl instead. Of course, it proved to be the dearest and sweetest baby ever brought to a Franklin home, and the father confessed a few hours later to his mother-in-law as follows:

"Well, do you know, I don't believe I ever could have stood the noise of a boy, anyhow."

It is claimed that a new invention called the teletype delivers typewritten messages up to a distance of 5,000 miles, transmitting at speeds of from forty to eighty words a minute a printed message being delivered at the receiving end of the wire.

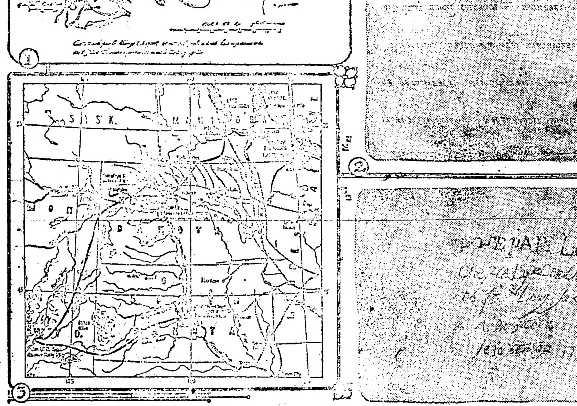
Falsen Becomes Verendrye



1. Map drawn for Verendrye by Chief Ochakah, showing route to "The Western Sea". 2.—Lead plate buried by Verendrye's sons at Fort Pierre, So. Dak., March 30, 1743, taking possession of country in the name of the king of France. 3.—Map showing Verendrye's route to the Rocky Mountains. 4.—Reverse side of lead plate shown in illustration No. 2.

After many years the explorer and fur trader Sieur de la Verendrye, Canadian born scion of a noble French family, who penetrated the American Northwest, across what is now North Dakota, almost two centuries ago, has been given official recognition by having a town in North Dakota named in his honor.

Warren Upham, in his historical work entitled "Minnesota in Three Centuries," called attention to the importance of Verendrye's explorations, and suggested that his name be given to some county in northern Minnesota. That was not done, but it is equally appropriate that a town in North Dakota should be named in honor of Verendrye, because he was the first white man to explore the state, claiming the territory for the French crown during the reign of Louis XV.

Verendrye, formerly Falsen, is located on the main line of the Great Northern Railway between Fargo and Minot, twenty-seven and a half miles southeast of the latter city, where the railroad crosses the Mouse river.

Verendrye and his sons had the distinction of carrying the flag of France farther into the interior of the American Northwest than any other French explorers. They were, as well, the last of the French to contribute anything worth while to the history of that nation's explorations in America, for it was but little more than twenty years from the time the Verendryes looked upon the Rocky Mountains on January 1, 1743, that the flag of France ceased to fly over the region known as New France. Forty years later it disappeared entirely from the North American continent with the consummation of the Louisana Purchase in 1803. The following year saw Lewis and Clark set forth on their epoch-making expedition to the Pacific, crossing as they went the trail made by the Verendryes, who sixty years before, had vainly sought the same goal.

To Co-operative Creameries

The Blue Valley Creamery Company, that has been operating in Minnesota during the past three years, is making various attractive offers to farmers to get their cream, including an extra high price for butterfat in Sweet Cream. In this connection, however, it should be understood that their price for first-grade cream is not any better than the price paid by the best co-operative creameries in the State, while the price they pay for sour cream is only that paid by third-rate co-operative creameries in Minnesota.

In other statrs, where the Blue Valley has not the competition of co-operative creameries, their price is far below their price is far below the price they pay in Minnesota.

In November and December, 1922 and January, 1923, this Association made a special investigation of prices paid by the Blue Valley Creamery Company in Illinois, Ohio, Missouri, Iowa, and Nebraska. It was found that the average price paid by the Blue Valley at ten different points in these states, on certain dates, was 51.1 cents. New York Extras on these same dates was 52.3 cents. The average price paid by the best co-operative creameries in Minnesota at that same time was 60 cents.

Figures collected from 13 states in the middle west for October, November, and December of the past year give the average cream station and centralizer price at 34.4 cents. The average price paid by the co-operative creameries of Minnesota for this same period was 45 cents.

If the centralizers had control in Minnesota, as they have in these other states, could the Minnesota farmers expect the prices being offered by the Blue Valley Creamery in Minnesota at the time? In judging this, it is well to consider the price paid by the centralizers outside of Minnesota where they have no competition from cooperative creameries.

It should be known that two of the largest and most powerful centralizers in the United States (Blue Valley of Chicago and Fairmont Creamery Company of Omaha) are making a drive for business in Minnesota, and farmers should see the purpose that is evidently back of the prices they are paying. We do not want to say their purpose is to put the co-operative creameries out of business, but if they get any considerable amount of cream it will mean that the co-operative creameries would go out of business, because "A house divided against itself cannot stand."

We do not expect the farmers to leave their co-operative creameries where there are land owners and stockholders in the creameries, but there are places where actually 50 per cent and more of the patrons are not stockholders in the creamery.

There is strong competition ahead for many co-operative creameries and they should prepare by making their patrons stockholders and under contract to deliver their cream to the creamery. It should also realize that the best defence for a co-operative creamery is to make high-quality butter and to have the business affairs of the creamery first-class in every respect.

Land Being Sold In Many Localities

While there has not been a boom in the farm land business this spring nevertheless there has been a steady movement of farm lands in many communities thruout the state. This is very apparent in many of the older and well-settled districts. In Nicollet County several farms have changed hands during the past few months. The considerations have been somewhat low when one takes into account the location and the quality of the land. Two farms containing over 200 acres recently sold for $95 per acre, while several smaller farms sold at higher figures, one 80-acre tract selling for $200 per A.

The movement of farm land is not confined to Nicollet county and neighboring counties, but several central and northern counties have made reports showing that lands there are also changing hands. According to the Kanabec County Times several farms in Kanabec county have recently changed hands, some of the purchasers having come from other states.

Yes, Your Paper Is A Day Late

Your paper is a day late. There is no way of getting around the gruesome fact. Several reasons account for this. One, and the greatest one, is that the editor must get some sleep once in a while, not to mention getting an hour off now and then to do some studying.

To be serious: the recent change of the paper to eight pages makes it necessary for us to have two press days—one on Thursday and one on Friday. Then the papers must be mailed on Saturday.

This irregularity will last only till school is out in June, when the old date of issuing will be observed.

Fighting Fishes.
Prize-fighting fishes are very common on the coast of Japan and Siam. Their pugilistic tendencies are most pronounced, so much so that the natives make them take the place of boxers in Siam, and arrange matches in glass bowls between two of the species, heavy bets being laid on the result.

The Idle Word.
An idle word may be seemingly harmless in its utterance, but let it be fanned by passion, let it be fed with the fuel of misconception, of evil intention, or prejudice, and it will soon grow into a sweeping fire that will melt the chains of human friendship, that will burn to ashes many cherished hopes, and blacken more fair names than one.

London's Buildings.
If all the houses and buildings in London were placed side by side in a long line, they would reach across the three great continents of Europe, Asia and America.

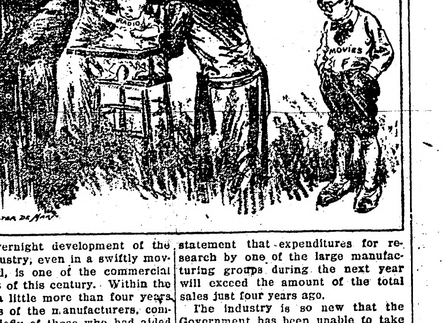
THE INFANT PRODIGY



The overnight development of the radio industry, even in a swiftly moving world, is one of the commercial romances of this century. Within the span of a little more than four years the ranks of the manufacturers, composed chiefly of those who had aided the army and navy during the war in the creation of the wireless telephone, have grown from a group of about fifty pioneers into an army of more than 3,000. Sales of radio material in 1920 amounted to a bare $1,000,000. It is estimated that the American public during the past year spent at least $150,000,000 in acquiring sets and parts of the instruments that tapped the ether. The strides that the industry is making may be indicated by the statement that expenditures for research by one of the large manufacturing groups during the next year will exceed the amount of the total sales just four years ago.

The industry is so new that the Government has been unable to take a census to determine its rank or proportions. Congress has not had time to frame legislation regulating it. Its past events have been kaleidoscopic, and the industry now is described by some as in a state of flux, although there are growing indications that it will settle down. For, with the changing phases, there is a distinct movement in the direction of standardization.—American Bankers Association Journal.

USERS of De Laval Cream Separators have carried away every first prize awarded at conventions of the National Creamery Buttermakers' Association since their first meeting in 1892. The record is unbroken!

The reason is that De Laval bowl design, together with low speed, enables the delivery of butter-fat globules unbroken and in their natural condition—thus insuring better butter.

Because of its close skimming the De Laval produces more cream, which means more butter.

Thus the user of a De Laval Separator gets both more and better butter.

She went to the little wash room at the rear, felt better immediately she had washed vigorously, combed her hair. She returned to the wagon to find a panic-stricken Dirk sure of nothing but that he had been deserted by his mother. Fifteen minutes later the two were seated at a table on which was spread what Chris Spanknoebel considered an adequate breakfast. A heartening enough beginning for the day, and a deceptive.

The Haymarket buyers did not want to purchase its vegetables from Selina DeJong. It wasn't used to buying of women, but to selling to them.

Selina had taken the covers off her vegetables. They were revealed crisp, fresh, colorful. But Selina knew they must be sold now, quickly. When the leaves began to wilt, when the edges of the cauliflower heads curled ever so slightly, turned brown and limp, their value decreased by half, even though the heads themselves remained white and firm.

Down the street came the buyers—little black-eyed swarthy men; plump, short-sleeved, greasy men; shrewd, tobacco-chewing men in overalls. Stolid red Dutch faces, sunburned. Lean, dark foreign faces. Shouting, clatter, turmoil.

The day broke warm. The sun rose red. It would be a humid September day such as frequently came in the autumn to this lake region. Garden stuff would have to move quickly this morning. Afternoon would find it worthless.

The peddlers looked at her bunched bouquets, glanced at her, passed her by. It was not unkindness that prompted them, but a certain shyness, a fear of the unaccustomed. Her wares were tempting but they passed her by with the instinct that the ignorant have against that which is unusual.

By nine o'clock trading began to fall off. In a panic Selina realized that the sales she had made amounted to little more than two dollars. If she stayed there until noon she might double that, but no more. In desperation she harnessed the horses, threaded her way out of the swarming street, and made for South Water street farther east. Here were the commission houses. She knew that Pervus had sometimes left his entire load with an established dealer here, to be sold on commission. She remembered the name—Talcott—though she did not know the exact location.

The boy had been almost incredibly patient and good. At the wagon he had stood sturdily next his mother, had busied himself vastly assisting her in her few pitiful sales; had plucked wilted leaves, brought forward the freshest and crispest vegetables. But now she saw that he was drooping a little as were her wares, with the heat and the absence from accustomed soil. "Where we going now, mom?"

"To another street, Sobig—"

"Dirk!"

"—Dirk, where there's a man who'll buy all our stuff at once—maybe. Won't that be fine! Then we'll go home. You help mother find his name over the store. Talcott—T-a-l-c-o-double t."

William Talcott had known Pervus, and Pervus' father before him, and had adjudged them honest, admirable men. But of their garden truck he had small opinion.

In his doorway, he eyed the spare little figure that appeared before him all in rusty black, with its strained anxious face, its great deep-sunk eyes.

"DeJong, eh? Sorry to hear about your loss, ma'am. Pervus was a fine lad. No great shakes at truck farming, though. His widow, h'm? Hm." Here, he saw, was no dull-witted farm woman; no stolid Dutch woman truckster. He went out to her wagon, tweaked the boy's brown cheek. "Wa-al now, Mis' DeJong, you got a right smart lot of garden stuff here and it looks pretty good. Yessir, pretty good. But you're too late. Ten, pret' near."

"Oh, no!" cried Selina. "Oh, no! Not too late!" And at the agony in her voice he looked at her sharply.

"Tell you what, mebbe I can move half of 'em along for you. But stuff don't keep this weather. Turns wilty and my trade won't touch it. . . . First trip in?"

She wiped her face that was damp and yet cold to the touch. "First—trip in." Suddenly she was finding it absurdly hard to breathe.

He called from the sidewalk to the men within: "George! Ben! Hustle this stuff in. Half of it. The best. Send you check tomorrow, Mis' DeJong."

One hand on the seat she prepared to climb up again—did step to the hub. You saw her shabby, absurd side boots that were so much too big for the slim little feet. "If you're just buying my stuff because you're sorry for me—" The Peake pride.

"Don't do business that way. Can't afford to, ma'am. My da'ter she's studying to be a singer. In Italy now, Car'line is, and costs like all get-out. Takes all the money I can scrape together, just about."

There was a little color in Selina's face now. "Italy! Oh, Mr. Talcott!" You'd have thought she had seen it, from her face. She began to thank him, gravely.

"Now, that's all right, Mis' DeJong. I notice your stuff's bunched kind of extry, and all of a size. Fixin' to do that way right along?"

"Yes. I thought—they looked prettier that way—of course vegetables aren't supposed to look pretty, I expect—" she stammered, stopped.

"You fix 'em pretty like that and bring 'em in to me first thing, or send 'em. My trade, they like their stuff kind of special. Yessir."

As Selina gathered up the reins he stood again in his doorway, cool, remote, unlighted cigar in his mouth, while hand-trucks rattled past him, barrels and boxes thumped to the sidewalk in front of him, wheels and hoofs and shouts made a great clamor all about him.

"We going home now?" demanded Dirk. "We going home now? I'm hungry."

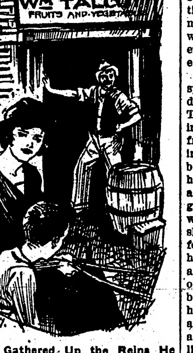
"Yes, lamb." Two dollars in her pocket. All yesterday's grim toil, and all today's, and months of labor behind those two days. Two dollars in the pocket of her black calico petticoat. "We'll get something to eat when we drive out a ways. Some milk and bread and cheese."

The sun was very hot. She took the boy's hat off, passed her tender work-calloused hand over the damp hair that clung to his forehead.

She made up her mind to drive east and then south. Pervus had sometimes achieved a late sale to outlying grocers. Jan's face if she came home with half the load still on the wagon! And what of the unpaid bills? She had, perhaps, thirty dollars, all told. She owed four hundred. More than that.

Fear shook her. She told herself she was tired, nervous. That terrible week. And now this. The heat. Soon they'd be home, she and Dirk. The comfort of it, the peace of it. Safe, desirable, suddenly dear. No work for a woman, this! Well, perhaps they were right.

Down Wabash avenue, with the L trains thundering overhead and her horses, frightened and uneasy with the unaccustomed roar and clangor of traffic. It was terribly hot.



As She Gathered Up the Reins He Stood in His Doorway, Cool, Remote.

The boy's eyes popped with excitement and bewilderment.

"Pretty soon," Selina said. The muscles showed white beneath the skin of her jaw. "Pretty soon. Prairie avenue. Great big houses and lawns, all quiet." She even managed a smile.

"I like it better home."

Prairie avenue at last, turning in at Sixteenth street. It was like calm after a storm. Selina felt battered, spent.

Then another thought came to her. Her vegetables, canvas covered, were fresher than those in the near-by markets. Why not try to sell some of them here, in these big houses? In an hour she might earn a few dollars this way at retail prices slightly less than those asked by the grocers of the neighborhood.

Agilely she stepped down the wheel, gave the reins to Dirk. She filled a large market basket with the finest and freshest of her stock and with this on her arm looked up a moment at the house in front of which she had stopped. The kitchen entrance, she knew, was by way of the alley at the back, but this she would not take. Across the sidewalk, down a little flight of stone steps, into the vestibule under the porch. She looked at the bell—a brass knob. "Pull it!" said the desperate Selina. "I can't! I can't!" cried all the prim dim Vermont Peakes, in chorus. "All right. Starve to death and let them take the farm and Dirk, then."

At that she pulled the knob hard. Jangle went the bell in the hall. Again. Again.

Footsteps up the hall. The door opened to disclose a large woman, high cheek-boned, in a work apron; a cook, apparently.

"Good morning," said Selina. "Would you like some fresh country vegetables?"

"No." She half shut the door, opening it again to ask, "Got any fresh eggs or butter?" At Selina's negative she closed the door, bolted it. Well, that was all right. Nothing so terrible about that, Selina told herself. Simply hadn't wanted any vegetables. The next house, and the next, and the next. Up one side of the street, and down the other. Four times she refilled her basket. At one house she sold a quarter's worth. Fifteen at another. Twenty cents here. Almost fifty there.

Twenty-first street—Twenty-fifth—Twenty-eighth. She had over four dollars in her purse. Dirk was weary now and hungry to the point of tears. "The last house," Selina promised him, "the very last one. After this one we'll go home."

The last house. She had almost five dollars, earned in the last hour. "Just five minutes," she said to Dirk, trying to make her tone bright, her voice gay. Her arms full of vegetables which she was about to place in the basket at her feet she heard at her elbow:

"Now, then, where's your license?"

She turned. A policeman at her side. "License?"

"Yeh, you heard me. License. Where's your peddler's license? You got one, I s'pose."

"Why, no. No." She stared at him, still.

"Well, say, where d'ye think you are, peddlin' without a license! A good mind to run you in. Get along out of here, you and the kid. Leave me ketch you around here again!"

"What's the trouble, officer?" said a woman's voice. A smart open carriage of the type known as a victoria, with two chestnut horses whose harness shone with metal. "What's the trouble, Reilly?" The woman stepped out of the victoria.

"Woman peddling without a license, Mrs. Arnold. You got to watch 'em like a hawk. . . . Get along wid you, then." He put a hand on Selina's shoulder and gave her a gentle push.

There shook Selina from head to foot such a passion, such a storm of outraged sensibilities, as to cause street, victoria, silk-clad woman, horses, and policeman to swim and shiver in a haze before her eyes. The rage of a fastidious woman who had had an alien male hand put upon her. Her face was white. Her eyes glowed black, enormous. She seemed tall, majestic even.

"Take your hand off me!" Her speech was clipped, vibrant. "How dare you touch me! How dare you! Take your hand!—" The blazing eyes in the white mask. He took his hand from her shoulder. The red surged into her face. A tanned weather-beaten toil-worn woman, her abundant hair skewered into a knob and held by a long gray-black hairpin, her full skirt grimed with the mud of the wagon wheel, a pair of old side boots on her slim feet, a grotesquely battered old felt hat (her husband's) on her head, her arms full of ears of sweet corn, and carrots, and radishes and bunches of beets; a woman with bad teeth, flat breasts—even then Julie had known her by her eyes. And she had stared and then run to her in her silk dress and her plumed hat, crying, "Oh, Selina! My dear! My dear!" with a sob of horror and pity. "My dear!" And had taken Selina, carrots, beets, corn, and radishes in her arms. The vegetables lay scattered all about them on the sidewalk in front of Julie Hempel Arnold's great stone house on Prairie avenue. But strangely enough it had been Selina who had done the comforting, patting Julie's plump silken shoulder and saying, over and over, soothingly, as to a child, "There, there! It's all right, Julie. It's all right. Don't cry. What's there to cry for! Sh-sh! It's all right."

Julie lifted her head in its modish black plumed hat, wiped her eyes, blew her nose. "Get along with you, do," she said to Reilly, the policeman, using his very words to Selina. "I'm going to report you to Mr. Arnold, see if I don't. And you know what that means."

"Well, now, Mrs. Arnold, ma'am, I was only doing my duty. How cud I know the lady was a friend of yours. Sure, I—" He surveyed Selina, cart, jaded horses, wilted vegetables.

"And why not!" demanded Julie with superb unreasonableness. "Why not, I'd like to know. Do get along with you."

He got along, a defeated officer of the law, and a bitter. And now it was Julie who surveyed Selina, cart, Dirk, jaded horses, wilted left-over vegetables. "Selina, whatever in the world! What are you doing with—" She caught sight of Selina's absurd boots then and she began to cry again. At that Selina's overwrought nerves snapped and she began to laugh, hysterically. It frightened Julie, that laughter. "Selina, don't! Come in the house with me. What are you laughing at! Selina!"

With shaking finger Selina was pointing at the vegetables that lay tumbled at her feet. "Do you see that cabbage, Julie? Do you remember how I used to despise Mrs. Tebbitt's because she used to have boiled cabbage on Monday nights?"

"That's nothing to laugh at, is it? Stop laughing this minute, Selina Peake!"

"I'll stop. I've stopped now. I was just laughing at my ignorance. Sweat and blood and health and youth go into every cabbage. Did you know that, Julie? One doesn't despise them as food, knowing that. . . . Come, climb down, Dirk. Here's a lady mother used to know—oh, years and years ago, when she was a girl. Thousands of years ago."

Chapter IX

The best thing for Dirk. The best thing for Dirk. It was the phrase that repeated itself over and over in Selina's speech during the days that followed. In this period of bewilderment and fatigue Julie had attempted to take charge of Selina much as she had done a dozen years before at the time of Simeon Peake's dramatic death. And now, as then, she pressed into service her wonder-working father and bounden slave, August Hempel.

"Pa'll be out tomorrow and I'll probably come with him. I've got a committee meeting, but I can easily—"

"You said—did you say your father would be out tomorrow! Out where?"

"To your place. Farm."

"But why should he? It's a little twenty-five-acre truck farm, and half of it under water a good deal of the time."

"Pa'll find a use for it, never fear. He won't say much, but he'll think of things. And then everything will be all right."

A species of ugly pride now possessed Selina. "I don't need help. Really I don't, Julie, dear. It's never been like today. Never before. We were getting on very well, Pervus and I. Then after Pervus' death so suddenly like that I was frightened. Terribly frightened. About Dirk. I wanted him to have everything. Beautiful things. I wanted his life to be beautiful. Life can be so ugly, Julie. You don't know. You don't know."

"Well, now, that's why I say. We'll be out tomorrow, pa and I. Dirk's going to have everything beautiful. We'll see to that."

It was then that Selina had said "But that's just it. I want to do it myself, for him. I can. I want to give him all these things myself."

"But that's selfish."

"I don't mean to be. I just want to do the best thing for Dirk."

It was shortly after noon that High Prairie, hearing the unaccustomed chug of a motor, rushed to its windows or porches to behold Selina DeJong in her mashed black felt hat and Dirk waving his battered straw wildly, riding up the Halsted road toward the DeJong farm in a bright red automobile that had shattered the nerves of every farmer's team it had met on the way. Of the DeJong team and the DeJong dog Pom, and the DeJong vegetable wagon there was absolutely no sign. High Prairie was rendered unfit for work throughout the next twenty-four hours.

In the twelve years' transition from butcher to packer Aug Hempel had taken on a certain authority and distinction. Now, at fifty-five, his hair was gray, relieving the too-ruddy color of his face. In the last few years he had grown very deaf in one ear, so that when you spoke to him he looked at you intently. This had given him a reputation for keenness and great character insight, when it was merely the protective trick of a man who does not want to confess that he is hard of hearing.

"You want to sell?"

"No."

"That's good. Few years from now this land will be worth money." He had spent a bare fifteen minutes taking shrewd valuation of the property from fields to barn, from barn to house. "Well, what do you want to do, heh, Selina?"

They were seated in the cool and unexpectedly pleasing little parlor, with its old Dutch luster set gleaming softly in the cabinet, its three rows of books, its air of comfort and usage.

Selina clasped her hands tightly in her lap—those hands that, from much grubbing in the soil, had taken on something of the look of the gnarled things they tended. The nails were short, discolored, broken. The palms rough, calloused. The whole story of the last twelve years of Selina's life was written in her two hands.

Discovered

A young man whose gallantry was in excess of his pecuniary means sought to remedy the defect and to save the money required for the purpose of expensive flowers by arranging with a gardener to let him have a bouquet from time to time in return for his cast-off clothes.

One day he received a bunch of roses which he at once dispatched to his lady love.

In sure anticipation of a friendly welcome he called at the girl's house the same evening and was not a little surprised at a frosty reception.

"A note! I? To be sure, I sent you flowers; but—"

"And this note was with the bouquet. Do you mean to deny it?"

And the young man read: "Don't forget the old trousers you promised me the other day."

DAIRY

DAIRY FEEDS MUST BE DIGESTIBLE

It is not what a cow eats, but what she digests that counts. You might feed a cow wood, as chemical analysis shows that wood has a high percentage of carbohydrates, but this does not do the cow any good because she cannot digest it. Protein is found abundantly in tankage, feathers and other substances, but these substances are not fitted to the cow's digestive system and are, therefore, useless as a dairy ration, points out B. E. Goodale, associate professor of dairying, at Clemson College.

Take corn for example, a cow will digest 75 pounds out of every 100 pounds of corn, but only 33 pounds out of 100 pounds of cottonseed hulls. That means that 67 per cent of the cottonseed hulls fed to a cow is wasted. These figures also vary according to the different nutrients. Of the protein in oat hulls, only 50 per cent is digestible, while in linseed meal, cottonseed meal, and gluten feed, 85 to 89 per cent of the protein will be digested by the cow.

This all goes to show, says Mr. Goodale, that the crude analysis that you will find printed on the tags attached to feed bags may be misleading. A cow can't read a tag and she is the one that has to digest the feed. It is, therefore, up to you to supply her with the right kind of materials to keep her machine working at maximum efficiency.

It stands to reason that the more a cow digests, the more she can produce in the way of milk, so it is up to us to find out how we can help the cow digest her feed and what kind of feed provide the materials needed for milk.

Nearly everyone knows that a ration should be bulky so that it is sure to go into the first stomach and be rechewed as cud.

Then a feed must be palatable. You wouldn't eat a very big meal if you sat down to a pot of cold, boiled potatoes without salt or butter, but if you sat down to a nice juicy steak with appetizing gravy, sauces, vegetables, and desserts, you would eat a hearty meal.

It is just the same with a cow. She digests a palatable feed much better than one she doesn't relish. This is an important point, because the milk flow depends largely upon the quantity of feed eaten. The average cow needs about sixteen pounds of digestible nutrients a day, to maintain her body and produce three and one-half gallons of milk. Half of this sixteen pounds goes for body maintenance and half for milk.

If a cow doesn't like her feed, she will consume less and the digestive juices are held back. Palatability is a big aid to digestion.

Heifer on Thin Pasture Needs Supply of Grain

Herds of cattle, some handled in the right way and some handled in the wrong way, have been noticed by L. V. Wilson of the division of dairy husbandry at University farm, St. Paul, Minn., in visiting farms in the vicinity of the twin cities recently.

The young cattle in some of these herds, says Mr. Wilson, are turned out on the theory that they will pick up on pasture and look pretty good in a few weeks. Their owners fail to realize that while they are "picking up" their growth is really being retarded.

The young cattle in other herds, however, show that the breeders have realized that young heifers must be given the best possible chance during the winter and that they must continue their gains in weight every day when first turned out to pasture. Such gains are assured by adding a little additional grain in the early pasturing days. In this way the inevitable shrinkage which comes to animals when only access to grass is given is avoided.

Dairy Notes

As each cow's milking is weighed, a glance up the columns will tell how she compares with the rest.

* * *

It is impossible to fatten calves for butchers on silage without some kind of supplementary feed such as cottonseed cake or corn.

* * *

Ground oats are considered especially valuable for bulls. Cottonseed meal is not usually regarded with favor especially when fed in large amounts. Some breeders think it causes impotency.

* * *

* * *

The government reports state that there are only about 86 per cent as many cattle on feed in the eleven corn-belt states as there were last year at this time.

* * *

Potato growers who have dairy cows and who make a practice of feeding small and otherwise unmarketable tubers, have found cull potatoes a valuable addition to the dairy ration.

THE KITCHEN CABINET

(©, 1925, Western Newspaper Union.)

Last night the unseen gates swung back, so softly no one knew
The troops of dreary, darksome things that silently withdrew;
— For down a way
All somber gray,
Like phantoms put to rout,
The bleakness of the winter days slipped sighing, shuffling out.
The long cold, purple shadows fled,
and the late lingering snow,
To leave a patch of healing green where early violets glow.

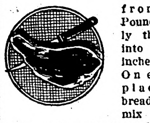
EVERYDAY GOOD THINGS

When a main dish seems difficult try:



Veal Birds.—Have a thin slice or two of veal cut from the leg. Pound until evenly thin and cut into strips two inches by four. On each strip place seasoned bread crumbs, mix with a little onion and a grating of lemon peel, chopped salt pork and bits of the veal cut when trimming. Roll up and skewer with toothpicks or tie with twine. Place in a hot frying pan and brown well all over in butter. Now add a cupful of rich milk and let simmer for a half hour or more. Serve with mashed potatoes and the gravy from the pan.

Graham Pudding.—Take one-half cupful of molasses, one-half teaspoonful of soda, one-quarter of a teaspoonful of cloves, four tablespoonfuls of butter, one cupful of chopped raisins, one-half teaspoonful of cinnamon, one and one-half cupfuls of graham flour, one-half cupful of milk, one egg, one teaspoonful of salt. Mix all the ingredients, adding the raisins after steaming them. Turn into a buttered mold and steam two and one-half hours. Serve in any desired sauce.

Cinnamon Toast.—This is a very popular dish with the ladies served with a cup of tea. Spread thin slices of toast with butter and cover with a mixture of cinnamon and sugar. Allow the toast to stand where it will be kept hot until it becomes saturated with the mixture.

Irish Stew.—Take two and one-half pounds of lamb, eight potatoes, four turnips, four small onions, a quart of boiling water. Place the sliced vegetables in layers with the lamb, cut from the neck. Cover with the water and stew gently until the vegetables are tender. Season well and serve hot.

Fried Crumbed Lamb.—Take thin slices of uncooked lamb, or thinly sliced rare roast beef, dip into seasoned egg, then into crumbs and fry in deep fat or in a small amount of butter.

Ordinary Good Things.

For those who have the heavy meal at noon, supper dishes are quite important. When the noon meal has been a meatless dinner, for supper try this:

Ham and Potato Scallop.—Cut one and one-fourth pounds of ham into serving sized pieces. Parboil three cupfuls of sliced potatoes, put them in layers with ham in a buttered baking dish and cover each layer with a medium white sauce, using one and one-half cupful of the sauce, one and one-half cupfuls of milk and three tablespoonfuls of flour and the same of butter, cooked together; one-half teaspoonful of salt.

Date Loaf.—Take one and one-half cupfuls of graham flour unsifted, one and one-half cupfuls of white flour, one-half cupful of sugar, six teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one teaspoonful of salt, one cupful each of chopped dates and nuts, one egg, one and one-half cupfuls of milk and two tablespoonfuls of mazola. Mix in the order given. Bake in a well-greased pan forty-five minutes.

Soft Honey Cake.—Add a scant teaspoonful of soda to five tablespoonfuls of boiling water, fill the cup with extracted honey. Take one-half cupful of butter; add one egg, two cupfuls of flour and one teaspoonful of ginger; stir and mix well and bake in a sheet in a very slow oven.

Ohio White Cookies.—Cream together one cupful each of sugar and butter; add two well-beaten eggs, a half cupful of milk or cream, a half teaspoonful of nutmeg, three teaspoonfuls of baking powder and just flour enough to roll very thin. Bake in a quick oven.

Ohio Ginger Cookies.—Take one and one-half cupfuls of shortening, one cupful of molasses, one cupful of sugar, two well-beaten eggs, one teaspoonful of soda dissolved in a scant half cupful of boiling water. Add ginger, cinnamon and cloves to taste. Add flour and chill on ice before rolling. The less flour that can be used, the more moist and tender are the cookies.

Hot Gingerbread.—This is such a wholesome cake that it may be given the children: Take one cupful each of molasses and sugar, one-half cupful of melted lard, a teaspoonful of salt, a tablespoonful or less of ginger, one beaten egg, three cupfuls of sifted flour, and when all well-mixed stir in one cupful of boiling water to which a teaspoonful of soda has been added. Pour into a greased dripping pan and bake forty minutes in a moderate oven.

BALKAN STATES MOBILIZE FORCES

Conditions In Bulgaria Declared Grave Despite Contrrdictory Dispatches.

London.—Dispatches from Sofia continue to minimize the seriousness of the Bulgarian situation but indirect reports from other Balkan centers picture conditions as grave.

Balkan states are said to be taking military precautions against the spread of the terrorism in Bulgaria which flared to its high mark with the recent attack on King Boris, assassination of General Georghieff and bombing of the Sveti Kral cathedral, where 160 persons were killed.

Rumania is reported to be moving troops toward both her Russian and Bulgarian frontiers.

Jugoslavia is guarding her border; indirect reports say Greece is mobilizing a part of her army, but will not intervene unless Greek frontiers are threatened.

Greece, according to these reports, will regard an increased Bulgarian army as a menace to the Balkan status quo. Greek agents are reported en route to Belgrade to renew negotiations for a Greek-Jugoslav alliance.

Rumanian intervention will follow any attempt to establish a Communistic republic in Bulgaria, it is declared in dispatches from Bucharest, where sensational accounts of the Bulgarian situation have been received.

Belgrade dispatches to London say a serious diplomatic conflict between Rumania and Bulgaria appears possible unless Bulgaria abandons her suspicion of Jugoslav complicity in the campaign of terrorism in Bulgaria.

Sofia dispatches quote Minister of the Interior Rousseff as declaring that not over 1,500 persons have been arrested throughout Bulgaria during the campaign against terrorists. He asserts that Moscow furnished arms and money for the subversives.

Other indirect dispatches, however, continue to report that King Boris of Bulgaria is virtually a prisoner in the royal palace at Sofia under General Lazareff, head of the military junta.

Sofia continues apparently under virtual martial law. The Bulgarian militia is being increased as authorized by the council of ambassadors at Paris, to cope with the situation and Rumania, Jugoslavia and Greece are protesting the increase.

SNOWDRIFTS BLOCK TRAFFIC

Butte Digs Itself Out of 20-Inch Snow Blanket.

Butte, Mont.—King Winter's most bitter springtime invasion Thursday unleashed the elements on Montana and left a snow-covered state, high running streams and partly paralyzed transportation and communication systems.

Small hamlets were marooned, highways were blocked with huge drifts, wires were down, city industrial traffic was demoralized and railroad traffic seriously affected.

Butte dug itself out of a 20-inch blanket of snow left by the storm which diminished and was followed by rain. Corps of workmen began to repair the damage, estimated at $50,000, which the storm caused in the city to power lines and traffic lanes.

Striking with its greatest fury in this section, the storm stripped thousands of trees barren in its 24 hour visitation. Two hundred motorists or more stalled in the drifts on city streets and country highways, were rescued by squads of workers who towed machines to safe destinations. No accidents or casualties were reported.

AWAITING WAR DEBT ANSWER

Jay Says He Is Expecting Early Reply From Rumania.

Washington.—Minister Jay, at Bucharest, has informed the state department that he is expecting an early answer from the foreign office to the recent communication calling attention to the fact that the Rumanian relief debt to the United States, still awaited negotiation of a refunding agreement, although similar debts to other governments had been refunded.

If the forthcoming Rumanian reply is of such character as to indicate an early adjustment of the debt, aggregating, with interest, about $42,000,000, Mr. Jay probably will proceed to his new post as ambassador to Argentina without further delay.

The state department meanwhile has withheld any formal announcement in connection with the offer of the formal announcement of the Rumanian diplomatic post to William S. Culbertson, vice-chairman of the tariff commission. The usual diplomatic procedure which involves formal notification from Bucharest of the acceptability of Mr. Culbertson remains to be concluded.

"In addition to paying parents of Chinese girl babies three cents, the garments the babies are wrapped in are often asked to be returned," he said.

Above all, be a booster, not a knocker.

Mr. Coolidge's hobby-horse has no head. The part Cal didn't need was horse sense.

If all the people in a town were as loyal to the town as the editor of the old home newspaper, what a wonderful difference it would make! Mail order houses would be known only in history. The editor is always up and doing, never ceasing, even if at times he gets little or no encouragement. He leaves unsaid that which might cast reflection on the town and its people and emphasizes the good things. He is a booster for better schools and churches, civic pride and highest citizenship. He is forever telling of the live business men; that they carry a larger class goods and sell them cheaper than any other place on earth. He favors good roads so that the people may get to town to patronize the home merchant. He is in favor of public improvements of whatever nature that will help to make the old home town a better place in which to live. He is the most liberal doner in the town; what he can't give in cash he gives in his only salable product — space in his paper. Is there any person more beneficial to a town than the newspaper man? If there is, name him. —The Fairview Republican.

HOW EXCESSIVE TAXES BLIGHT A NATION'S LIFE

Productive Effort Stops if Government Takes Undue Share of Profits, Says Treasury Official.

WEALTH IN RUSSIA FLED BEFORE THE TAXGATHERER

Men in America Prefer Golf to Giving Fruits of Three Days Work a Week to Income Taxes

The blighting effects of excessive taxation, leading to a nation's economic destruction, are described in the current issue of the American Bankers Association Journal by Garrard B. Winston, Under-secretary of the Treasury. Citing possible effects on the Ford Motor Car Company, he declares that "the value is so large and its ownership so centered it is conceivable that collection of inheritance taxes may check, if not destroy, that unit of policy which has created and expanded that industry and thus prevent its future prosperity. Of what avail, then, is it to any government if it collects one hundred million dollars once in estate taxes and destroys a source of income upon which it can rely for revenue year after year?

"Success of the Ford Company does not mean simply that Mr. Ford and his son have grown wealthy. It means employment of tens of thousands of men and women; that mines, forests, railroads and vessels are brought into use; that the public has received an efficient and inexpensive means of transportation; that the farm is in touch with the city, and the worker with his office." Mr. Winston says in part:

Wealth Flees Oppression

"Upon first impression it might appear that a nation could take all of the earnings of its citizens or all of their property. The Soviet government proposed to appropriate all instrumentalities of trade and commerce. Yet, when the state reached out to grasp this wealth, it disappeared and left nothing but a few tangible objects, such as gold and jewels, which were easily transported to other countries. Wealth in Russia ceased to exist.

"If income tax rates are placed so high that capital in productive business no longer gives a net return commensurate with the risk, capital will go out of productive business, lie idle, go abroad, go into tax-exempt securities, or find other ways of avoiding the tax. If income tax rates are so excessive that a man of ability finds he must work more than three days a week for the government, he will become discouraged and decide that the result is not worth the effort. Less income will be produced and less will be realized from the tax.

"Recently a letter came to the Treasury from a small farmer. He owned a few acres which in 1913 were assessed at $900 and on which a tax of $13 was levied. In 1924 the assessed value increased to $3,200 and the tax to $135, but the farm failed to produce any more. Taxes exceeded the rental value of the land and more than the net earnings of the property were taken by the state. The farm was abandoned and now produces no tax.

"Often there come to notice cases where a particular improvement is not made, or a particular business is not started, because after deducting taxes the risk exceeds the value of the expected return. Men have dropped business, spent their winters in Florida and their summers abroad, because what they are permitted to retain under present tax rates is not worth the labor they must give to acquire it. They prefer golf to the further development of the country.

Unscientific Taxes Destroy a Nation

"Unscientific methods of taxation may actually destroy the very earnings or property which it should be the principal interest of a government to foster. When it reaches the limits of what is known as its taxable capacity, a nation has begun to die. If taxes are raised too high, a country will slowly but surely destroy itself. It will use for daily consumption the seed corn on which its future life depends, and the spirit of initiative and adventure in its people will finally disappear. One or more of three things happen: The quantity of consumption is cut down, which means a lowering of the standard of living; or capital accumulations for extensions, improvements and new undertakings must diminish, resulting in a slowing up of progress and lessening eventually of taxable revenue; or, thirdly, a slackening of effort on the part of the citizen will take place when too large a part of his earnings are taken in taxes.

"The effort in taxation should be to find the tax which will continue to raise money over a period of years. Invariably, with an excessive tax, its yield has fallen off year by year, while each rate reduction is reflected in an increase of taxable income. If the Treasury is to be assured a continuance of revenue, our citizens must prosper. If they are to prosper, the appropriation by the state of their earnings and property must be based upon economically sound principles."

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

ON "SUCKER LISTS"

"Ever since I bought that $500 electric company bond, Aunt Emmy," said Helen, "I have been pestered by all sorts of bond salesmen to buy other things. I should like to invest again, but I am bewildered. Every day or so I see something that sounds so good. But I don't know what to do."

"That reminds me," said Aunt Emmy, fishing through her work basket and taking out some clippings from her needle book. "I have an article from a magazine that will help. The writer gave some questions to make a bond salesman answer in writing and said that if the salesman were on the square he would answer the questions satisfactorily. Here they are," and Aunt Emmy began to read:

"'1. Will my bank say that the house which is offering the security is reputable?

"'2. Give an exact description of the security?

"'3. What provision is made for paying off this and other securities of the company?

"'4. What is the nature of the business of the company?

"'5. How much of a margin did the company earn annually over all its depreciation and interest charges for each of the last ten years?

"'6. What dividends has the company paid on its stock for each of the last ten years?

"'7. What are the company's total assets and liabilities and has it sufficient funds to carry on its business?

"'8. What are the experience and reputation of the men controlling and operating the company?'

"Then the next thing to do is to go to your banker and let him check up all this information for you," added Aunt Emmy. "Now that you know your name is on a 'sucker list' be doubly careful."

"What's a 'sucker list,' Aunty?"

"It is a list of the names of people who have purchased securities or inquired about them. Such lists are bought by so-called investment brokerage houses all over the country. Lots of bad securities are sold through unscrupulous brokers writing to the names on those lists."

"Oh, that's it, is it?" exclaimed Helen. "I suppose the poor people are flattered at getting such letters. I know I was."

"Just so," Aunt Emmy said, with a smile.—Anne B. Aymes.

HOW BANKERS HELP

Seventeen students are securing an education in the Georgia State College of Agriculture through financial aid which the State Bankers Association is giving. In 1923 the Association increased its annual dues so as to contribute toward the education of boys and girls in club work who could not otherwise receive a higher education. This year, therefore, $1,000 was put into a trust fund with the College to be loaned to students who need help. It was placed in what is known as the "Ex-President's Fund," a fund which has been receiving voluntary contributions from the retiring presidents of the Bankers Association since 1915. In amount the fund is now $7,153. Fifty students have been helped prior to this year making a total of sixty-seven

Let's Get a 92-Scoring Butter!
It is very important to deliver your cream twice a week in order to get a 92-scoring butter.
All our butter is scored and inspected by the Government Inspector and whatever score he places on our butter is the basis on which the Creameries Ass'n makes payment. Cream a week old will never make butter scoring 92 even tho it is sweet. Our biggest trouble is with old flavor which shows up in butter a week or so after it is made.
It is very encouraging the way our patrons have realized the necessity of delivering their cream twice a week yet some seem to think that as long as their cream is sweet it will make the highest grade butter.
Co-operate with us and you will get more money for your butterfat. In this way only we will get a 92-scoring butter.

STORMY SESSION MARKS CLOSE OF MINNESOTA'S 1925 LEGISLATURE

St. Paul—The 1925 legislature went out of existence at the close of an all night battle, the bitterest fight between house and senate ever recorded at the state capitol.

The lawmakers finished their real work Wednesday at 7 a. m., five hours after the traditional midnight hour fixed for the passage of bills. Clocks had been stopped so it was all right. At noon they reassembled, sleepy-eyed, and adjourned sine die.

It went out of existence barely avoiding a special session by a last minute agreement over a few thousand dollars that threatened to block all appropriations for state departments.

The fight was over salary increases, a matter of $2,400 a year involving five elective state officials—an insignificant item in comparison with the $41,813,901 total of appropriations.

In the long night vigil, Minnesota's legislators turned boys again, sang, tried serenading, conducted mock sessions and, led by Senator James A. Carley, Plainview democrat, voted abolition of the republican and the farmer-labor parties and left only the democrats to handle the state's political destinies.

Interim Bill Is Feature.

Reorganization of Minnesota's system of state government is the one outstanding achievement of the 44th state legislature. The session was not lacking otherwise in constructive results, but it was the "Interim bill" that hung over the members all through, from the opening days until the very close.

This big bill, which Governor Theodore Christianson helped to frame and which he urged early and late on the members of the legislature, is a reform in the administration of state affairs.

Every legislature for the last 14 years has been confronted with proposals to do this. The 1925 session did it.

As a result, Governor Christianson now sets forth upon one of the biggest jobs a state executive has ever undertaken, one wherein he hopes to accomplish savings for the taxpayers by placing the activities of the state upon a business basis, where every dollar will be spent in the way to get the greatest value.

While the bill abolishes various boards and bureaus, and transfers their duties to other units of government, the chief feature of the measure is the control of expenditures, which is exercised directly by the government over every agency. A department of administration and finance is created, in charge of three commissioners, directly responsible to the governor.

Highways and Motor Vehicles.

Minnesota's good roads program will go on to completion through passage of legislation which gives the state highway department finances to proceed with building of the trunk highway system in spite of extreme reluctance on the part of many legislators to be too liberal.

The financing of the state highway department was attained only after the greatest difficulties. An "economy" legislature was to be reckoned with, and there was much objection to going ahead with a program of road-building in the face of concerted demand for saving money.

But the friends of the good roads program succeeded in giving the highway department sufficient funds to proceed with the construction work, although not on as elaborate a basis as in past years.

A reduction of motor vehicle taxes was given the motor car owners, as partial compensation for the enactment of a 2-cent tax on gasoline. The other important highway legislation included a law to regulate all bus lines through the railroad and warehouse commission, and a redrafting of the state highway laws, which will provide for a force of men to patrol the trunk roads, and a more "common sense" set of speed laws.

The tax legislation that finally went through the legislature was more corrective in nature than it was important. There were some important bills introduced, but few of them went far after they left the committee's hands.

Public Welfare and Health.

Public welfare legislation which aroused the greatest interest was the struggle over the ratification of the proposed child labor amendment to the federal constitution. After a hard tussle the opponents of the constitutional amendment succeeded in having adopted a resolution which rejects the amendment.

Chiropractors' factions fought another war in the legislature in an attempt to have the present laws governing their profession modified. The bill was killed.

A bill was passed to make it a misdemeanor for anyone to missbrand a package which contains caustic or corrosive acids, alkilis and other substances. The statute of limitations for bringing actions against physicians, dentists and sanitariums for malpractice, error, mistake or failure to cure, was reduced to two years. The use of food coloring certified under the U. S. food and drug act will be legal henceforth. Up to the passage of such a law at this session Minnesota had been the only state in the union which forbade the use of certified colors in food products.

Governor Makes Statement.

The 1925 legislature appropriated too much money, in the opinion of Governor Christianson, but otherwise it made a good record, he said Wednesday in passing comment on the results of the 44th session. The governor reiterated his previous stand that appropriations could have been held below the $40,000,000 mark.

His statement in full follows:

"The 1925 legislature appropriated too much money. Otherwise it made a good record. It passed the bill reorganizing the state government, which will give the governor's office the power to check the expenditures of state departments. The bill does not go as far as it should in eliminating and consolidating agencies of government, but it provides a means to study the problem and make further recommendations to the next legislature.

"It is unfortunate that most of the unnecessary and objectionable appropriations are in such a form that they cannot be vetoed, under a constitution which gives the executive power to strike out but not reduce items. The total appropriations would have been held down to $39,000,000, and should have been.

"The legislature showed a commendable disposition to pass more laws than have been enacted at previous sessions, and to frown on proposals for two state activities.

"In my opinion the most serious mistake of the session was the failure to enact legislation compelling local units of government to provide definite and irrevocable means for the liquidation of their bonded indebtedness. It is evident that the practice of incurring bills for posterity to pay will continue at least two years longer."

Farmers Receive Aattention.

The farmers' principal concern about the Minnesota legislature this session seemed to be to make sure that he would be able to get some more loans through the rural credits system. The legislature is going to let him have a maximum of $30,000,000 more, this to be in addition to the $40,000,000 allowed by the 1923 legislature, all excepting $5,000,000 of which has been distributed.

The legislature decided to go ahead with the rural credits activity in spite of demands to cut down the work

BULGARIA BANS PUBLIC MEETINGS

U. S. Minister To Bulgaria Reports Conditions Are Improving.

Sofia.—All political party meetings throughout Bulgaria have been forbidden until further notice by an order issued by General Lazareff, commander of the Sofia garrison. All newspapers and periodicals are to be censured during the period of martial law in Bulgaria.

The Sofia director of the French banque generale, Kordoff, has been arrested and charged with transferring money to Communist conspirators.

Further arrests have been made as a result of information obtained by government agents who declare that leaders of the left wing Peasants' party were to form a new Bulgarian ministry after a revolution. It is stated that Captain Attanasoff was to be minister of war and Pertrini, the new premier.

U. S. Minister Reports.

Washington.—The situation in Bulgaria was reported as improved by American minister, Charles S. Wilson, at Sofia, in a dispatch received Saturday at the state department. A number of executions had taken place, the cablegram said, and about 1,500 arrests had been made.

No reference was made, however, to any action that might have been taken by Mr. Wilson in company with the British minister as reported in press reports. State department officials regard Mr. Wilson as an experienced authority and capable at all times in the handling of emergency problems.

Beyond the possible offering of informal suggestions in conversations at the foreign office and the taking of proper steps for the protection and safeguarding of American lives and property, officials here believe Mr. Wilson would have advised them and waited specific instructions from Washington before making any further move.

Official advices have not indicated that any American citizen or interest has become involved in the Bulgarian disorders and in the absence of reports from Minister Wilson asking instructions on the other aspects of the situation, it is not believed here that he sees any necessity for action on his part of a formal or official character.

SLOPE FARMERS BUY LAND

70 Transfers Past Few Months in Morton Were to Farmers.

Mandan, N. D.—More than $450,000 has changed hands in Morton county since the harvest of last year's big crop in the purchase of lands and without exception the 125 parcels of land sold in Morton county have been purchased by farmers enlarging their present holdings or renters who have bought farms of their own.

This estimate was made by A. H. Peterson, cashier of the Farmers State bank of Mandan after a week's careful study of deeds and contracts filed with the Morton county register of deeds in the period from August 1, 1924 to April 15, 1925.

This condition prevails throughout the slope district, according to information available here.

"For eight years practically no land changed hands with prices at a minimum," Mr. Peterson declard. "The war was partly responsible and the conditions after the war were anything but conducive to land deals. However, the harvesting of the greatest crop in many years last fall and sale of most of the farmer's grain holdings at prices ranging near the top figures reached, have completely changed conditions."

CUTS 4 BIG APPROPRIATIONS

St. Paul.—Slashing $1,836,160 from the four big appropriation bills submitted to him by the legislature, Governor Christianson late Saturday cut the total appropriation figures of the 44th session to below the $40,000,000 mark, just as he insisted in his inaugural message.

Despite the executive's protests, the legislature adjourned sine die Wednesday after having granted appropriations for the various state and the various state and semi-state activities totalling $41,813,901 as compared to appropriations for the same purposes of $40,278,669 granted in 1923.

In one chunk he lopped off $1,359,436 from the educational appropriation bill, which amount had been inserted to cover a deficiency for supplemental state school aid.

Deny Use of Champagne.

Washington.—Reported use of real champagne in the christening of the new air mail plane at Mineola, N. Y., revived a custom followed for many years in the christening of navy vessels, but abandoned with the advent of the Volstead law, making transportation of intoxicating liquor from one place to another illegal. Air mail service officers promptly disclaimed any connection with the christening, saying the plane had not yet been officially acceptd by the postoffice department.

AILMENTS OF YOUNG GIRLS

Relieved by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound School Teacher's Experience

Evanston, Wyoming.—"A few years ago I had troubles every month such as girls often have, and would suffer awfully every time. I was teaching school and it made it hard for me as I had to go to bed for two or three days. One day my mother suggested that I take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which I did, and it did wonders for me. In the course of a year I married and after my first baby was born I got up too soon and it caused a displacement. This troubled me so that I could hardly walk or do my housework. I knew what the Vegetable Compound did for me before so I took it again. It strengthened me and now I have five little kiddies. The eldest is six, the baby is five months old and I have twin boys three years old and a boy of five years. I do all my own housework, washing and ironing, and I never felt better in my life. I owe my health to your wonderful medicine and I recommend it to all my friends."—Mrs. VERBENA CARPENTER, 127 2nd Avenue, Evanston, Wyoming.

They know this gentle, yet effective treatment does sink deep, and will often soothe away in a few days the most stubborn rash as well as a trifling blemish. Constitution of France Holds On

Few Changes Have Been Made in Fifty Years.

Paris.—France celebrated very modestly a few weeks ago the fiftieth anniversary of the present French constitution. M. Painleve made an eloquent little speech in the chamber of deputies, and all parties joined in honoring a constitution which has worked so well for France and has practically escaped change since its promulgation. That is the strange thing about the constitution of 1870. France has upset many governments and shown great fickleness in substituting one political regime for another. In the last two decades four important amendments have been grafted on the American Constitution, a document held in exceptional popular reverence. But in France the constitution has been altered but twice in a half century, and that in very minor details.

In an article in Le Petit Parisien Senator Louis Dausset explained the other day the reasons of the constitution's success and disclosed its unexpected sources of strength. It was born of the times and the situation and has fitted their needs. He said:

"The French Republic had been proclaimed by the people of Paris on September 4, 1870. But the monarchist and Conservative majority in the national assembly multiplied obstacles to prevent a definite vote on the republican constitution which it was its mission to establish. One day it even struck out of a committee report the words 'government of the republic,' the vote being 359 to 335.

"It was left to the most modest but most tenacious of the representatives, M. Henri Wallon, 'Pere Wallon,' to hammer in an acknowledgment of the republic. On January 30, 1875, he was fortunate enough to secure the adoption, by a majority of one, of the famous text, in which the form of the government was officially determined in the article providing for the election of a 'President of the republic.'

"On February 25 following, the republic was proclaimed by 425 votes to 254. That was fifty years ago.

"The new constitution seemed very moderate and restrained to the reformers of that day. They thought that they had constructed only a temporary edifice. For fear of failing at their noble task, Henri Wallon and his friends had put forward with the minutest care the least controversial proposals and the most normal political solution and had clothed them in prudent language. In their own eyes they were merely launching the republic. A historian could compare it to 'a little Cinderella gliding about among the parties.' It took on at first the character of a conservative regime, which the inveterate monarchists and the advanced republicans both hoped to alter to conform to their ideas and interests. But all attempts at revision were to be futile.

Unmodified for Forty Years.

"After two slight modifications in 1879 and 1884—one relating to the transfer of the chamber and the seat of government to Paris, the other abolishing the nonrenewable seats in the senate—the republic's political charter remained unmodified for forty years. It has maintained the social order intact and has favored free play of public liberties. It has resisted all attacks and is better armed than any other regime in Europe to repel the Communist assault. Were not the French people, under its aegis, able to emerge victorious from the most terrible of wars? Are there not claims to the nation's gratitude?

"But its liberal character has made it popular with the immense majority of Frenchmen. It derives in their eyes its greatest strength and solidest guaranty of perpetuity from the fact that it has lasted more than twice as long as any other political regime in France since 1789—almost the life of two generations."

Excavators Unearth Prehistoric Arsenal

Rochester, England.—Prof. Ernest Albert Hooton of Harvard university is among the archeologists who are investigating the accidental discovery of what seems to be a prehistoric factory for tools and weapons. Some 4,000 stone implements have been unearthed, and the experts are of opinion that about 50,000 years ago the place was a considerable arsenal as things went then.

DISCOVER SECRETS OF FLOATING ICE IN ATLANTIC

Washington.—The coast guard is planning to train some of its officers as specialists in the patrol work.

Lieut. Commander Edward H. Smith, who has been serving as oceanographic officer of the service, is taking advantage of a year's fellowship offered him by the American-Scandinavian foundation, on the recommendation of Harvard scientists, and is studying the question of icebergs and their contributing causes and life at Bergen, Norway.

Commander Smith has been a pioneer in the ice-patrol work, serving on coast-guard vessels in the iceberg lanes and during the winter months working up data at coast-guard headquarters and conducting research at Harvard university.

From a mission of following icebergs and warning craft of their whereabouts the duties of the ice patrol have grown to include study of the ocean, including the currents that carry the bergs.

This service dates from 1914, following the signing by thirteen powers interested in transatlantic navigation of a convention which provided for "an international derelict-destruction, ice-observation and ice-patrol service."

The sinking of the Titanic by an iceberg in 1912 really initiated the movement and coast guard officers point with pride to the fact that since the ice patrol was established no lives have been lost because of icebergs in the ocean lanes of the North Atlantic.

Doctor Has Busy Voyage Prescribing by Radio

Plymouth, England.—Dr. Erskine Gray of the Cunard liner Antonia was kept busy on the last voyage of the Antonia from New York to Plymouth with calls for medical assistance from other vessels.

Four times daily for five days he prescribed by radio for a sailor who had been badly injured on the steamer Bosworth, hundreds of miles away. Then the American steamer Antinous reported its captain seriously ill. Doctor Gray diagnosed the case as one of pneumonia, and for three days prescribed treatment, which proved successful. Several other cases of minor nature, from ships many leagues distant from the Antonia, also were treated by radio.

The SANDMAN STORY

VAIN RED ROSE

ONE morning in a garden there was a little Dewdrop that wanted to get away from the sun's hot breath that it might stay in the garden all day, so it nestled close to a beautiful red rose and whispered: "Hide me, beautiful Rose, in the soft petals of your lovely gown."

The Rose was very vain and thought only of her own beauty, so she told little Dewdrop to creep close inside and nestle in her heart, for she wanted to keep it until moonlight flooded the garden, when her lover the nightingale would come to sing to her his love song.

Away down deep in her heart crept little Dewdrop, thinking that Red Rose must love it to let it rest in her heart and that when night came it would shine on one of the beautiful red petals of the rose and they would be the most admired of all the garden folks.

Lifted It in His Bill and Carried It to Another Rose.

But it did not know the cold, vain heart of the beautiful rose and all day long she kept Dewdrop from peeping once into the garden, as it longed to do, for fear of losing the jewel she wished to adorn her beauty at night.

By and by when the moonlight crept into the garden and made it almost like day the big red rose opened and told Dewdrop to rest upon one of her soft petals.

"Tonight I shall be the loveliest rose in the garden, for I can see that none of my sisters wears a jewel. How fortunate you are, little Dewdrop, to have me near you!"

Just then the sweet tones of the nightingale's love song filled the garden and Red Rose swayed a little in the breeze that her jewels might sparkle in the moonlight and make her more beautiful in the eyes of her lover.

When the nightingale flew closer and told the vain rose she was indeed the most beautiful rose in the garden she tossed her proud head and down tumbled the poor little dewdrop to the ground.

"Now see what you have done!" said the angry rose. "After I sheltered you all day you repay my kindness in this way." Never a word did she ask about the poor little dewdrop that lay trembling on the ground below.

"Rose, dear Rose," cried the dewdrop, "do bend over and help me to rest again on your soft cheek!"

"Bend over, indeed," replied the rose. "Why, you foolish thing, I might break my slender stem. You have spoiled my evening by tumbling off and you expect me to help you."

"But don't you love me, Rose, dear?" asked the dewdrop, who had been all day close to her heart and had grown to love her deeply.

"Love you!" exclaimed the vain rose. "Why, you silly little drop, I only saved you from the sun that you might make me more beautiful at night when the nightingale came to sing to me."

The nightingale had ceased his singing and had heard what the vain rose said, so he flew down to the dewdrop and gently lifted it in his bill and carried it to another rose more fragrant than Red Rose but not so beautiful.

Into the very heart of the pale pink rose the nightingale dropped the dewdrop. "Here you will find sweetness that will be worthy of your love," said the nightingale. "Here will I come each night and sing my love song, for the red rose has no heart for love. It is filled with vanity."

The Why of Superstitions

By H. IRVING KING

THE WREN

IT IS an omen of good luck to have a wren build its nest near the house. This, with the exception that it is also considered in some sections bad luck to kill a wren, appears to be the only survival in this country of the mystic character which pertains to the wren in Europe and has so long attached to it there that Professor Frazer considers the ceremonies attending the wren superstition to have "come down from a very primitive paganism."

The ancient Greeks and Romans, the modern Italians, Spaniards, French, Danes, Swedes, English and Welsh, regard the killing of a wren as sure to bring disaster to the slayer. But notwithstanding such belief the annual custom of "hunting the wren" was, to comparatively recent times, universal throughout Europe and exists in a modified form in many sections today, as, for instance, in the Isle of Man where on St. Stephen's day a wren is annually killed and buried after its body has been taken around the village and shown to the inhabitants.

The ceremony of killing the wren differed slightly in different countries but was everywhere rather elaborate. This annual slaying of an animal considered sacred and not to be killed at other times is a custom found among many peoples still living in a primitive state and was once common to primitive man. Frazer says: "The worshipful animal is killed with especial solemnity once a year and before or after death is carried from door to door that each of his worshipers may receive a portion of the divine virtue that is supposed to emanate from the dead or dying god. Religious processions of this sort must have had a great place in the ritual of European peoples in prehistoric times if we may judge from the numerous traces of them which have survived in folklore."

Your Health

By ANDREW F. CURRIER, M.D.

SHINGLES

SHINGLES, also known as herpes zoster, is painful and supposed to be due to some kind of infecting poison.

It is an acute, inflammatory disease, usually following the course of some nerve distributed over the skin.

It begins with general discomfort, loss of appetite, perhaps with a chill and fever (like so many infectious diseases) and with great sensitiveness in the skin.

These blisters are usually only on one side of the body, become inflamed, and leave scars which are sometimes prominent and disfiguring.

The disease occurs in children, in young adults, and the aged, often persisting with the latter for months and years.

The fever, with which it begins, lasts three or four days, the pain being sometimes dull and sometimes sharp. Sometimes the pain subsides after the eruption appears, but recurs from time to time.

This pain is severer in the old than in the young, and often is worse at night.

The blisters come in successive crops for four, five or six weeks, and suppurate, discharge, and at length scar over.

The eruption may follow exposure to draughts of cold air, or mental or physical exhaustion, and may occur as an epidemic.

The fluid in the blisters is first clear and watery, then turbid, bloody and purulent, and the resulting sores may resist healing a long time.

On the chest the eruption follows the course of a nerve between two adjacent ribs; on the face it may result in paralysis of the side affected, and the eye may be destroyed by it. It resembles chicken-pox, erysipelas and psoriasis, and is most frequent in cold weather.

A patient with this disease should remain in bed, and should fret and worry as little as possible.

The bowels should be kept open with castor oil or salts, and the diet should be simple, including milk, soups, eggs, cereals, fruits and no meat.

The eruption must be carefully dressed every day, and the blisters must not be broken if this can be avoided.

Gauze moistened with alcohol, or any suitable antiseptic lotion, may be used to protect the surface.

When possible, it is better to have the advice of an intelligent physician than to depend on self-treatment.

This is especially important with the view of obtaining as little ultimate scarring as possible.

"What's in a Name?"

By MILDRED MARSHALL

FACTS about your name; it's history; meaning; whence it was derived; significance; your lucky day and lucky jewel

THELMA

NO LIST of feminine names would be complete without the lovely Thelma. It is a Norse name, suggestive of the mythology of the Land of the Midnight Sun where Valkyries drive their gleaming chariots over the battlefield and conduct the glorious dead to their appointed places in Valhalla.

Little was known of Thelma and seldom was the name used outside of Scandinavia, until Marie Corelli in her sensational novel of that name presented the tragic love story of a beautiful Norwegian who was transplanted from the land of fjords to the center of London's smartest and most corrupt society.

From that time the number of Thelmas in England and America were legion. The name has had particular vogue in this country where the Scandinavian immigration is great. As a romantic and poetical name, Thelma is without equal, but her popularity has never extended beyond Scandinavian and English speaking countries.

Amber is Thelma's talismanic stone, it will guard her from all evil, especially from contagion. To wear it on a journey will preserve her from accident. Monday is her lucky day and 7 her lucky number.

Morpheus and Somnus

Morpheus, the ancient Greek god of dreams, was early pictured as an old man with wings. He held in his hands a vial or horn from which issued the sleep-producing vapor. Morpheus was the son of Somnus the god of sleep. The name Morpheus is derived from a form, and the name was given to the god of dreams because of the shapes or forms which he calls up before the dreamer.—Family Herald.

THE ROSE

I'LL never think of this old earth
As lacking utterly in worth
So long as in some garden close
I still can find the budding rose—
Beauty and fragrance all combined
In one rare flower of grace, and kind
To every passer-by with wit
Enough to pause and joy in it.

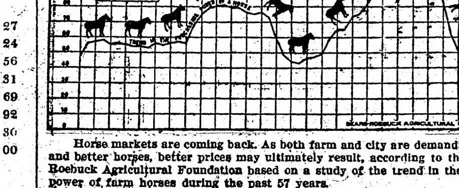
BAD STORM

Thursday evening last week a high wind that had a great ambition to become a tornado, swept thru this section and wrought much mischief and damage. Houses strained and tugged at their foundations, but settled once more when the wind passed over. A chicken house was reported missing at Thief River Falls. There is a highly plausible story of a farmer's wife whose washing had been standing in a tub on the back porch before the storm, but was found hanging to the branches of trees several yards distant the next morning. Tubs, boilers and sundry articles were reported missing by several townspeople.

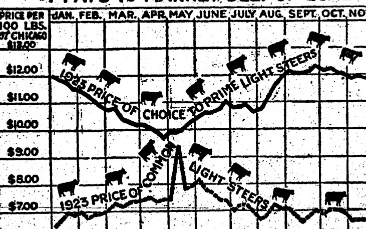
Horse Markets Coming Back



Horse markets are coming back. As both farm and city are demanding more and better horses, better prices may ultimately result, according to the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation based on a study of the trend in the buying power of farm horses during the past 57 years.

Low prices probably will continue to discourage horse and mule production and cause a falling off in the equine population until average prices return, the Foundation believes. But already horse breeding operations have begun to expand in the districts possessing the kind of foundation stock capable of producing the sort of horses the market wants. Attractive prices are now being paid for all good, big sound shapely drafters coming to market and good horses of the wagon type weighing 1,400 to 1,600 pounds. Prices have advanced from the extreme depression of two years ago.

How soon the turning point will be reached on the rank and file of horses is uncertain. Previous cycles of horse and mule prices as shown by the accompanying chart have varied greatly in length. The first lasted eleven years from depression to depression, the second eighteen years and the present cycle is already twenty-seven years. It seems logical to believe that an upward turn in prices which will last for a decade or longer will start before long and that good horses and mules produced from matings in the next few years will get the benefit of that advance by the time they reach marketable age. Good horses are the exception on farms today. It is unthinkable that good farmers will be content with plugs for long.

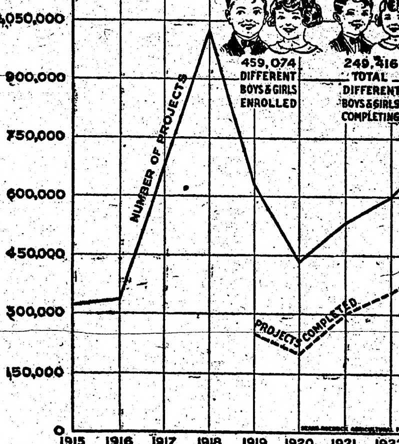


It is condition and quality rather than weight that decide whether a steer is to be placed in the beef cattle classification. Within the class it is condition and quality that largely determine the amount of profit that goes to the shipper. Choice to prime steers bring from 75 cents to $5.75 per hundredweight over the common light stock, according to a study made of lightweight steers coming to the Chicago market by the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation.

The bulk of the shipments are classified under the grades of prime steers, 1,200 to 1,600 pounds; choice steers, 1,150 to 1,600 pounds; good steers, 1,150 to 1,600 pounds; medium steers, 1,100 to 1,400 pounds, and common rough steers, 900 to 1,200 pounds. These are the classifications of the United States Bureau of Markets.

Prime beef steers are the ideal type, combining exceptional breeding and thorough finishing. Short neck and short legs, smooth flesh and well-filled, bulging briskets are prerequisites. Prime beef steers are rare, even steers good enough to grade as choice are few. They show most of the characteristics of the prime grade, good breeding and long feeding, smooth flesh and thick fat. On the block the quality steer will show a good proportion of red meat covered with a modest amount of smooth white fat. The lean, while firm of texture, will be mellow to the touch. The carcass should carry down full to the hock, being highly marbled with bright lean of a fine grain.

Junior Farmers Need Club Leaders



That club leadership must be increased properly to train the boys and girls of the nation who decide to remain on farms and become the bulwark of American agriculture is shown in a survey of the club work of the junior farmers just completed by Benjamin H. Darrow, director of the boys' and girls' club work of the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation.

According to the report of the Foundation, based on a count by the Department of Agriculture, 722,408 projects were begun in 1923 by 459,074 boys and girls, a number which is less than 6 per cent of the farm youth of the nation of club age. Of these projects 429,746 were completed by 249,416 club members. Girls completing their work outnumber the boys three to two, there being 150,194 girls and 99,222 boys. The report also indicates that 55.6 per cent of the enrolled girls finished their projects, while only 52.9 per cent of the boys completed theirs. The high point reached in 1918, as shown by the accompanying chart, was due to the expansion of club work in connection with the slogan of the day: "Food will win the war." After the crisis was over there was retrenchment and club work suffered.

"Many of the 8,000,000 boys and girls engaged in club work hope to leave the farm," said Darrow, "but 80 per cent of them will remain in the country, experience has shown. All who stay on the farm should have the benefit of the inspiration and training club work affords. If we are to provide this for the junior farmers of the nation, we must rapidly increase the number of county club leaders."

Let's Get a 92-Scoring Butter!
It is very important to deliver your cream twice a week in order to get a 92-scoring butter.
All our butter is scored and inspected by the Government Inspector and whatever score he places on our butter is the basis on which the Creameries Ass'n makes payment.
Cream a week old will never make butter scoring 92 even tho it is sweet. Our biggest trouble is with old flavor which shows up in butter a week or so after it is made.
It is very encouraging the way our patrons have realized the necessity of delivering their cream twice a week yet some seem to think that as long as their cream is sweet it will make the highest grade butter.
Co-operate with us and you will get more money for your butterfat. In this way only we will get a 92-scoring butter.

THE HOLT WEEKLY NEWS

Vol. 15; No. 1. Holt, Marshall County, Minn., Friday, May 8, 1925. $1.25 per year in Advance

IT CAN BE DONE BUT THE FARMERS MUST SAY SO

That is, to make 80 per cent of the Co-operative Creamery butter in Minnesota "LAND O' LAKES" butter.

LAND O' LAKES is the new name selected a year ago for the highest quality co-operative creamery butter. It must be made from strictly Sweet Cream, and cream of only the finest flavor.

For butter to carry the LAND O' LAKES trade-mark, it must score 93 or above, by Government inspection.

Five years ago not 20 per cent of the butter made in this state scored 93. Thru the co-operative creameries working together in their State Association they have gotten the quality of their butter up to as high as 54 per cent LAND O' LAKES.

The demand is so increased for LAND O' LAKES Sweet Cream butter that 80 per cent of the output is now needed for that brand.

Just think of it! Up to a year ago not a pound of Minnesota co-operative creamery butter was sold under its own name. Now, a good sized train load is sold every week under the brand LAND O' LAKES. Quality has won!

But to get enough LAND O' LAKES butter and to keep the quality up to that high standard, requires not only the co-operation of the creameries, but that of the patrons. The farmers must take a hand in the work and say that this high quality butter can be produced in every co-operative creamery in the State.

BLACKSMITH SHOP BURNED

The blacksmith shop of Axel Nelson, located at Hanna, N. D. was burned down, with all its contents, last Wednesday night. Mr. Nelson returned to Holt on Thursday night.

The accident was caused by sparks from a power - engine catching fire in some gasoline that was nearby. The flames immediately spread beyond control. Seeing that the building was doomed, Mr. Nelson devoted his energies to saving the machinery. He barely escaped with his car, which he drove right thru the big front doors which he had wired shut.

Mr. Nelson was going to take his family and belongings to Hanna as soon as he was well-started in his business, when the fire occurred. He is now stocking up on another blacksmith outfit, and hopes to get started in his business again.

WHY BANKS?

LESSON X

By J. H. PUELICHER, Chairman
Public Education Commission, American Bankers Association.

When opening a commercial account the bank furnishes the depositor with a pass book, deposit slips and blank checks.

J. H. Puelicher

COMMERCIAL ACCOUNT=Account in bank used in connection with funds employed in business transactions, from which withdrawals are made by checks.

PASS BOOK=A small account book in which the bank enters a customer's deposits; an entry serves as his receipt for that amount.

DEPOSIT SLIPS=Printed blanks with spaces in which the depositor writes the amount of cash and of each check deposited.

BLANK CHECKS=Printed forms for orders on the bank to pay out money from the depositor's account. The depositor writes in the name of the person to whom he wants money paid, the amount he wishes paid, and then signs his own name. When the check comes to the bank it pays the sum of money as indicated, deducting it from the depositor's account, and keeps the check which it cancels. Cancelled checks are each month returned to the depositor and serve him as receipts for the payments made.

About ninety per cent. of all business transactions are finally paid by bank checks. They facilitate business and are a safe way to transmit funds in paying bills, wages or meeting other obligations.

THE BANKER

The banker is a business man but, at the same time, he is a public servant. He manages his institution to earn dividends for its stockholders, but it has now come to be regarded as his duty to give sound advice and perform many services which result in no direct addition to his earnings account. He accepts the deposits of the parents for the account of the baby when it is born. He keeps the funds and invests them as the child grows. He advises the young man when, in leaving school, he enters business. His counsel is given with financial assistance as the business develops. When his client retires from its management he acts as trustee in handling his investments and finally upon the client's death, he is called upon to administer the estate and act as an advisor to the heirs. A knowledge gained from books is a necessary part of his preparation but he needs many things which he cannot learn in that way—greatest among them, an understanding of human nature.—Clarence R. Chaney, President American Institute of Banking.

The Eau Claire County Bankers Association, Wisconsin, appointed an agricultural committee early in May. Plans are now under way to adopt definite farming projects for the county in line with the projects adopted by the state bankers agricultural committee in co-operation with the College of Agriculture. This is the start of the organization of Wisconsin counties in the banker-farmer movement.

ANOTHER INCOME TAX CUT IS SEEN

Greatly Increased Surplus Over Estimates Indicated In Returns.

Washington.—Unofficial estimates by treasury officials indicate that a 12 per cent reduction in income taxes may be possible as the next step in lifting the federal tax burden.

This figure, while calculated without intention to commit Secretary Mellon to any policy, was suggested Saturday on the basis of an incomplete analysis of returns on income taxes, under the present law as shown in the March or first quarterly installment. It would bear out previous estimates that another $200,000,000 total reduction could be made, effective on taxes paid in 1926.

Present indications are that the treasury will avoid making any definite proposal to the next congress when it is expected the tax question again will be up. While Mr. Mellon has made no direct statement on the subject, most of his advisers favor keeping the treasury out of the fight; they are urging that the treasury inform congress of the state of the finances and point out what is possible, thus leaving the whole question of rates for the congressional leaders to decide.

The first indication that another cut in income taxes was possible was given when the March installment exceeded the treasury's estimate, made last summer, by about $8,000,000. Further evidence that the total revenue receipts will be larger than originally calculated is given also in receipts from import tariffs which just now are about $5,000,000 above the amount collected up to the same date in 1924.

Miscellaneous receipts, a general source of revenue from which it had been expected about $127,000,000 would be cut off through the reduction by the last law, have not dropped to that extent, and indications are that the decline will only slightly exceed $105,000,000.

POLA HELD FOR SMUGGLING

New York.—Pola Negri, motion picture actress, who arrived here on the Berengaria, was detained shortly after embarking, by customs officials on a charge of failing to declare three pieces of jewelry valued at 300,000 francs, it was learned Saturday. Miss Negri was also charged with attempting to smuggle 16 bottles of liquor into this country.

Miss Negri said that on several former trips to and from Europe she had never been questioned about her jewels by the officials because she was an alien. However, her last return from Europe, before Friday, was 2½ years ago and since then she has taken out her first naturalization papers and established a permanent residence in Hollywood, Calif. Miss Negri said that she had not known that this changed her status, doing away with her duty exemption.

The jewelry consisted of a large diamond bracelet, a 12-carat emerald ring and an unset emerald of 96 carats, she said. She explained that she had exchanged several old pieces of jewelry for the three pieces seized Saturday. The unset emerald, she asserted, was once the property of a king of Prussia.

SEAPLANE SETS NEW RECORD

Navy Ship Stays in Air 28 Hours, 36 Minutes—Runs Out of Gas.

Philadelphia.—Making a new world's record for non-stop flights for seaplanes, the all-metal hull PN-9, built to fly from California to Honolulu, dipped into the Delaware river Saturday after being in the air 28 hours and 36 minutes. She came down only because she ran out of gasoline.

The flight to test her capacity for the cross-Pacific hop, was pronounced a success in every way by navy officers. She took the air so easily at 10:22 a.m., Friday, with 1,300 gallons of gasoline that observers said she could load more fuel and stay in the air longer. Her engines ran smoothly and the long flight was without especial incident, the pilots said.

The PN-9, observers said, flew at an average speed sufficient to carry her farther than from San Diego to the Hawaiian Islands. At the end of the 27th hour it was announced she had flown just far enough to equal the distance between San Deigo and Honolulu. It was pointed out by experts that in a straightaway flight, flying conditions would be somewhat easier and that the plane probably could go much farther in the same number of hours than she did in the test.

Deny Plot Against Boris.

Sofia, Bulgaria.—The government authorities Saturday issued an official denial of the report that they discovered a plot against King Boris involving the blowing up of the palace. It is asserted that quiet has been restored, but possibly this is the lull before the storm. Investigations of the last few days have clearly demonstrated that the communist doctrines are deeply embedded in official and school circles and that the revolutionary movement was instigated by Moscow, the report says.

Marshall McCormack

Marshall McCormack is the recently elected mayor of Herrin, Williamson county, Ill., the scene of so many bloody affrays. He controls the city council.

NEW RUM WAR STARTED

13 Arrested in Campaign To Dry Up Border Leaks.

Minneapolis—Border warfare on organized gangs of rum runners, operating on regular schedule from Canada to the Twin Cities, was under way along 600 miles of the Canadian border line, and prohibition officers, with a Minnesota general as their commanding officer, had 13 prisoners and three large automobiles, and smuggled liquor valued at $25,000 captured in 24 hours, to show as first spoils of the war.

The border patrol was more than doubled. A force twice as large as any previously put in the field was on duty, with "flying squadrons" stationed on international roads.

WOMAN IMPRISONED 5 YEARS

Father, 60, Charges Son-in-law, 64, Locked Young Bride in Cabin.

Jersey City, N. J.—The sudden flare of an old feud between two barge captains revealed to police the story of a young woman, the daughter of one barge man and the wife of the other, said to have been held prisoner on her elderly husband's coal barge for five years.

During that time, the woman's father charged, his daughter had never set foot on land or been allowed to communicate with landsmen. Since first going onto the barge as a bride, he said, she had borne three children.

DEMANDS QUICK EVACUATION

Troop Withdrawal Vital to Welfare of Europe, Says German Chancellor.

Berlin—In order to bring about stable European conditions, the question of the evacuation of the Cologne area by the Allies must be speedily settled, Dr. Hans Luther, the German chancellor, declared in a statement.

"For more than three months," he said, "we have waited in vain for the reason held to justify the non-evacuation."

"The people of Europe desire the removal of uncertainty and lack of clearness," Dr. Luther had previously declared. "A policy having that end in view must naturally be governed by the law of continuity and cannot arbitrarily change its direction."

U. S. NAVY 'CAPTURES' HAWAII

Greatest Military Exercise In Pacific Comes To An End.

Honolulu — The joint army-navy maneuvers for 1925 were officially concluded.

The tactical exercise was declared ended with the capture by the "blue" attacking force of Haleiwa, which guards the Pearl Harbor naval base.

Umpires of the maneuvers were receiving contentions from commanders of both the "blue" and the "black" defenders, preliminary to the commencement of the verbal war to determine who won the maneuver "war."

MITCHELL TO KEEP UP FIGHT

Resumes Rank of Colonel Upon Leaving Air Service Post.

Washington—Within a few hours after he had surrendered the stars which for almost five years had marked him a brigadier general while assistant chief of the army air service, Colonel William A. Mitchell appeared before a group of officers who had gathered to bid him farewell and took up anew his fight for a unified air service.

Fleet Gets Anti-Aircraft Guns.

San Francisco—The naval cargo carrier Sirius arrived here with a consignment of improved antiaircraft guns which will be taken to Puget Sound navy yard at Bremerton, Wash., for installation on dreadnoughts of the battle fleet. The new rifles, which will displace the three inch rifles now in use, shoot a five inch projectile and are said to be superior in every way. They are capable of a range of nearly twice that of the three inch guns, the charge of shrapnel is almost twice as heavy.

BALDWIN PRAISES U.S. PART IN WAR

Prime Minister Is Speaker at Reunion of British Missions to America.

London—The prime minister, Stanley Baldwin, presided at the sixth annual reunion dinner of the British war missions to the United States. Every one of these missions, the prime minister smilingly remarked, went over to the United States to contract debts, which they left to him to pay.

Telegrams were read from King George, President Coolidge, Sir Esme Howard, the British ambassador at Washington; John W. Davis, former American ambassador at London; Frank B. Kellogg, secretary of state; General John J. Pershing and others interested in Anglo-American friendship.

After recalling America's immense war efforts and her "example of enthusiasm, hard work and receptiveness of ideas," Mr. Baldwin spoke of the day when the first American troops appeared in London. He told of how the sight of them affected him as he watched them marching by the horse guards on parade.

"It seemed to me then as impossible to cheer," he said, "as I always find it impossible to applaud when I have heard the most beautiful music—music that stirs the soul rather than the head."

N. W. BUYING POWER JUMPS

March, 1925, Business Volume Gains 25 Per cent, Federal Reserve Report Shows.

Minneapolis — Buying power of the ninth federal reserve district increased $175,664,000 in March, 1925, over March, 1924, and sent the March volume of business, measured in money value, to a total of 25 per cent higher than the total for the same month last year, the Federal Reserve Bank said in a monthly report, made public in Minneapolis.

Increased buying power was shown by a total of $821,647,000 on deposit in individual accounts in March, compared with $645,983,000 in the same month of 1924.

Sales of farm implements led business gains for the month with a total 68 per cent larger than in March, 1923. Dry goods, shoes, groceries and building materials showed substantial increases.

MARY MAC SWINEY LECTURES

Declares Hunger Strike Is Weapon Only Against Unjust Authority.

Minneapolis—Mary MacSwiney, addressing a large audience in the First Unitarian church, denied that she had threatened a hunger strike if she is jailed by United States immigration officials. She spoke under the auspices of Minneapolis chapter of the American Association for Recognition of the Irish Republic.

The keynote of Miss MacSwiney's speech on Ireland was "The Republic lives yet and will live forever."

"It was incorrectly reported in the newspapers that I had threatened a hunger strike," Miss MacSwiney said. "I have never made such a threat nor have I at any time been unready to cooperate with the officials of the United States in carrying out their duty. One uses a hunger strike only as a weapon against illegal authority."

VETOES BIBLE READING BILL

Declares Measure Urged Opposes Principle of Religious Liberty.

Columbus, Ohio—The Buchanan Bible bill passed by the recent session of the Ohio general assembly to make daily reading of the Bible in all public schools of Ohio compulsory, was vetoed by Governor Vic Donahey because "it opposed the principles of civil and religious liberty which have made our government the model for the world."

Contrary to expectations, the governor did not make any comment on the actions of various factions in the legislature which supported or opposed the bill.

FRENCH VETS IN PLANE DASH

Two War Pilots, Injured in Air Crashes, Will Use Monoplane.

Paris — Two one-legged French war veterans who lost their limbs in aerial crashes, will attempt a nonstop flight of 3,600 miles across the Atlantic from Paris to New York about July 20.

The pilots, flying a modified Fokker monoplane of 500 horsepower, will attempt to fly from Paris over London, Ireland, New Foundland, Nova Scotia and on to New York city without landing. They will carry 500 liters of gasoline and oil.

Indiana Dry Law Drastic.

Indianapolis — The "Wright bone dry" law in Indiana, the most drastic measure enacted in the United States since prohibition, went into effect in the Hoosier state, with both state and federal officers prepared to enforce the new code.

Under the new law containers with the smell of liquor and the testimony of the officers that they smelled liquor are prima facie evidence of the operation of a "blind tiger" with a penalty of 30 days to six months in jail and a fine of from $100 to $500.

UNCOVER PLOT TO BOMB KING'S HOME

Sofia—May day here was marked by the opening of the trial by court-martial of persons accused of complicity in the bomb explosion in the Sveta Kral cathedral, resulting in the death of 160 people, and the discovery of a second attempt upon the life of King Boris.

The new attempt upon the king's life was frustrated by officers of the palace guard, who, suspecting that the opening of the trial of the Communists might be seized upon by their friends as the hour of another outrage, made a careful examination of the royal residence and especially of subterranean passages which are extensive under this structure.

In one of these tunnels the officers found an infernal machine believed to be set for the destruction of the palace and all in it. The machine was removed immediately.

The first attempt on the life of King Boris was made April 14, while he was motoring in the country outside Sofia.

ENGLISH MUSEUM GETS PLANE

Refuses to Keep Craft in United States Built in 1903.

Dayton, Ohio—The Times museum at South Kensington, England, is to be the permanent home of an historic American relic of aviation, the original Wright airplane, invented by Orville and Wilbur Wright, and which made its first flight on December 17, 1903.

In announcing that the machine would be sent across the Atlantic Orville Wright said that several American museums had asked for it, but that he feared to trust it to the one institution among them which seemed to be national in character because of what he termed the mutilation of the Langley machine of 1903. Mr. Wright asserted that officials of the institution had permitted this priceless relic to be taken out of the museum in 1914 and its original materials mutilated in connection with a patent litigation.

COOLIDGE PLANS SCHEDULE

Will Return to Capital From Minnesota to Attend Session.

Washington—President Coolidge intends to remain in Washington to attend the semi-annual budget meeting June 22, but plans to leave shortly after that date for an extended vacation in New England.

Early in June the president will go to Minnesota to attend the Norse-American centennial, returning here after delivering an address there. He feels that he should be present at the government's business meeting, and regardless of weather conditions, does not intend to start on his vacation until after it is out of the way.

Mr. and Mrs. Coolidge plan to spend a month or more at Swampscott, Mass., and also visit the president's father at Plymouth, Vt., before returning to Washington.

SHIPS COLLIDE; 5 DROWN

Steamer Rams Schooner—Wife of Captain and Four of Crew Die.

Halifax, N. S.—One woman, the wife of the captain, and four members of the crew of the schooner Cape d'Or lost their lives off Sambro lightship when the schooner sank after being rammed by the steamer Clackamas.

Two other vessels, the Norwegian steamer Moldegaard and the steamer Azov, were ashore and were certain to be total losses because of the heavy seas off the coast. The crew of the Moldegaard was in danger of perishing on account of the inability to launch boats. The crew of the Azov was rescued by the wrecking steamer Ocean Eagle.

McCLINTOCK CASE STUDIED

Coroner's Jury Hears Evidence Supporting Theory of Conspiracy.

Chicago—Cumulative testimony in the inquest into the death of William Nelson McClintock, "millionaire orphan," was offered by a pharmacist, a salesman, a reporter, a doctor's widow, an undertaker and a former girl detective.

Some of the evidence related to the deaths of McClintock's mother and Dr. Oscar Olson, friend and physician of the McClintock family, deputy coroner Charles F. Kennedy having sustained Judge Harry Olson, instigator of the investigation, in offering evidence of the theory that three deaths may have been involved in a protracted conspiracy to obtain the McClintock estate.

Check Given Dodge Estate.

Detroit, Mich.—The last step in the sale of Dodge Brothers, Incorporated, to Dillon, Read & Co., New York bankers, was taken here when representatives of the owners of the automobile company turned over to the purchasers the deeds, bills of sale, and other papers involved in the transfer of title. It is understood the $146,000,000 proceeds of the sale will be deposited in banks here and elsewhere. Some part of it will be held awaiting settlement of government taxes.

"I want to stay here, and work the farm, and make it pay. I can. I'm not going to grow just the common garden stuff any more—not much, anyway. I'm going to specialize in the fine things—the kind the South Water street commission men want. I want to drain the low land. Tile it. That land hasn't been used for years. It ought to be rich growing land by now, if once it's properly drained. And I want Dirk to go to school. Good schools. I never want my son to go to the Haymarket. Never. Never.

"My life doesn't count, except as something for Dirk to use. I'm done with anything else. Oh, I don't mean that I'm discouraged, or disappointed in life, or anything like that. I mean I started out with the wrong idea. I know better now. I'm here to keep Dirk from making the mistakes I made."

Aug Hempel's tone was one of meditation, not of argument. "It don't work out that way, seems. About mistakes it's funny. You got to make your own; and not only that, if you try to keep people from making theirs they get mad." He whistled softly through his teeth following this utterance and tapped the chair seat with his finger.

"It's beauty!" Selina said then, almost passionately. Aug Hempel and Julie plainly could make nothing of this remark, so she went on, eager, explanatory. "I used to think that if you wanted beauty—if you wanted it hard enough and hopefully enough—it came to you. You just waited, and lived your life as best you could, knowing that beauty might be just around the corner. You just waited, and then it came."

"Beauty!" exclaimed Julie, weakly. She stared at Selina in the evident belief that this work-worn haggard woman was bemoaning her lack of personal pulchritude.

"Yes. All the worth-while things in life. Work that you love. And growth—growth and watching people grow. Feeling very strongly about things and then developing that feeling to—to make something fine come of it." She threw out her hands in a futile gesture. "That's what I mean by beauty. I want Dirk to have it."

"For pity's sake!" pleaded Julie, the literal, "let's stop talking and do something. Pa, you've probably got it all fixed in your mind long ago. It's time we heard it. Here Selina was one of the most popular girls in Miss Fister's school, and lots of people thought the prettiest. And now just look at her!"

Aug Hempel stood up. "If you think giving your whole life to making the boy happy is going to make him happy you ain't so smart as I took you for. You go trying to live somebody else's life for them."

"I'm not going to live his life for him. I want to show him how to live it so that he'll get full value out of it."

"Keeping him out of the Haymarket if the Haymarket's the natural place for him won't do that. How can you tell! Monkeying with what's to be. I'm out at the yards every day, in and out of the cattle pens, talking to the drovers and herders, mixing in with the buyers. I can tell the weight of a hog and what he's worth just by a look at him, and a steer, too. My son-in-law, Michael Arnold, sits up in the office all day in our plant, dictating letters. His clothes they never stink of the pens like mine do. . . . Now I ain't saying anything against him, Julie. But I bet my grandson Eugene"—he repeated it, stressing the name so that you sensed his dislike of it—"Eugene, if he comes into the business at all when he grows up, won't go within smelling distance of the yards. His office, I bet, will be in a new office building on, say Madison street, with a view of the lake. Life! You'll be hoggin' it all yourself and not know it."

"And I suppose," retorted Selina, spiritedly, "that when your son-in-law, Michael Arnold, is your age he'll be telling Eugene how he roughed it in an office over at the yards in the old days. These will be the old days."

August Hempel laughed good-humoredly. "That can be, Selina. That can be." He chewed his cigar and settled to the business at hand.

"You want to drain and tile. Plant high-grade stuff. You got to have a man on the place that knows what's what, not this Rip Van Winkle we saw in the cabbage field. New horses. A wagon. I will get you the horses, a bargain, at the yards." He took out a long flat check book. He began writing in it with a pen that he took from his pocket—some sort of marvelous pen that seemed already filled with ink and that you unscrewed at the top and then screwed at the bottom. He squinted through his cigar smoke, the check book propped on his knee. He tore off the check with a clean rip. "For a starter," he said. He held it out to Selina.

"There now!" exclaimed Julie, in triumphant satisfaction. "That was more like it. Doing something.

But Selina did not take the check. She sat very still in her chair, her hands folded. "That isn't the regular way," she said.

August Hempel was screwing the top on his fountain pen again. "Regular way? for what?"

"I'm borrowing this money, not taking it. Oh, yes, I am! I couldn't get along without it. I realize that now, after yesterday. Yesterday! But in five years—seven—I'll pay it back." Then, at a half-uttered protest from Julie, "That's the only way I'll take it. It's for Dirk. But I'm going to earn it—and pay it back. I want a—" she was being enormously businesslike, and unconsciously enjoying it—"a—an I. O. U. A promise to pay you back just as—as soon as I can. That's business, isn't it? And I'll sign it."

"Sure," said Aug Hempel, and unscrewed his fountain pen again. "Sure that's business." Very serious, he scribbled again, busily, on a piece of paper. A year later, when Selina had learned many things, among them that simple and compound interest on money loaned are not mere problems devised to fill Duffy's arithmetic in her school-teaching days, she went to August Hempel between laughter and tears.

"You didn't say one word about interest, that day. Not a word. What a little fool you must have thought me."

"Between friends," protested August Hempel.

But—"No," Selina insisted. "Interest."

"I guess I better start me a bank pretty soon if you keep on so businesslike."

Ten years later he was actually the controlling power in the Yards & Ranger's bank. And Selina had the original I. O. U. with its "Paid in Full. Aug Hempel," carefully tucked away with other keepsakes that she foolishly treasured—ridiculous scraps that no one but she would have understood or valued—a small school slate such as little children use (the one on which she had taught Pervus to figure and parse); a dried bunch of trilliums; a bustled and panniered wine-red cashmere dress, absurdly old-fashioned; a letter telling about the Infanta Eulalie of Spain and signed Julie Hempel Arnold; a pair of men's old side-boots with mud caked on them; a crude sketch, almost obliterated now, done on a torn scrap of brown paper and showing the Haymarket with the wagons vegetable-laden and the men gathered beneath the street-flares, and the patient farm horses—Roelf's childish sketch.

"My Life Doesn't Count, Except as Something for Dirk to Use."

Chapter X

It th[illegible] vague characteristics called (variously), magnetism, manner, grace, distinction, attractiveness, fascination, go to make up that nebulous quality known as charm; and if the possessor of that quality is accounted fortunate in his equipment for that which the class-day orators style the battle of life, then Dirk DeJong was a lucky lad and life lay promisingly before him. Undoubtedly he had it; and undoubtedly it did. He was not one to talk a great deal. Perhaps that was one of his most charming qualities. He listened so well. Older men especially said he was a smart young feller and would make his mark. This, surprisingly enough, after a conversation to which he had contributed not a word other than "Yes," or "No," or, "Perhaps you're right, sir," in the proper places.

It was during those careless years of Dirk's boyhood between nine and fifteen that Selina changed the DeJong acres from a worn-out and down-at-heel truck farm whose scant products brought a second-rate price in a second-rate market to a prosperous and blooming vegetable garden whose output was sought a year in advance by the South Water street commission merchants.

These six or seven years of relentless labor had been no showy success with Selina posing grandly as the New Woman in Business. No, it had been a painful, grubbing, heart-breaking process as is any project that depends on the actual soil for its realization. She drove herself pitilessly. She literally tore a living out of the earth with her two bare hands. Yet there was nothing pitiable about this small energetic woman of thirty-five or forty with her fine soft dark eyes, her clean-cut jaw-line, her shabby decent clothes that were so likely to be spattered with the mud of the road or fields, her exquisite nose with the funny little wrinkle across the bridge when she laughed. Rather, there was something splendid about her! something rich, prophetic. It was the splendor and richness that achievement imparts.

It is doubtful that she ever could have succeeded without the money borrowed from August Hempel; without his shrewd counsel. She told him this, sometimes. He denied it. "Easier, yes. But you would have found a way, Selina. Some way. Julie, no. But you, yes. You are like that. Me, too. Say, plenty fellers that was butchers with me twenty years ago over on North Clark street are butchers yet, cutting off a steak or a chop."

Dirk had his tasks on the farm. Selina saw to that. But they were not heavy. By the time he returned from school the rough work of the day was over. His food was always hot, appetizing, plentiful. The house was neat, comfortable. Selina had installed a bathroom—one of the two bathrooms in High Prairie. The neighborhood was still rocking with the shock of this when it was informed by Jan that Selina and Dirk ate with candles lighted on the supper table. High Prairie slapped its thigh and howled with mirth.

"Cabbages is beautiful," said old Klaas Pool when he heard this. "Cabbages is beautiful I betcha."

Selina, during the years of the boy's adolescence, had never urged him to a decision about his future. That, she decided, would come. As the farm prospered and the pressure of necessity lifted she tried, in various ingenious ways, to extract from him some unconscious sign of definite preference for this calling, that profession.

Until Dirk was sixteen she had been content to let him develop as naturally as possible, and to absorb impressions unconsciously from the traps she so gullefully left about him. There was a shed which he was free to use as a workshop, fitted up with all sorts of tools. He did not use it much, after the first few weeks. He was pleasantly and mildly interested in all things; held by none. Selina had thought of Roelf when they were fitting up the workshop. The Pools had heard from Roelf just once since his flight from the farm. A letter had come from France. Selina had never heard from him. But one day years later she had come running to Dirk with an illustrated magazine in her hand.

"Look!" she cried, and pointed to a picture. He had rarely seen her so excited, so stirred. The illustration showed a photographic reproduction of a piece of sculpture—a woman's figure. It was called The Seine. A figure sinuous, snake-like, graceful, revolting, beautiful, terrible. The face alluring, insatiable, generous, treacherous, all at once. It was the Seine that fed the fertile valley land; the Seine that claimed a thousand bloated lifeless floating Things; the red-eyed hag of 1793; the dimpling coquette of 1650. Beneath the illustration a line or two—Roelf Pool. . . . Salon. . . . American. . . . future. . . .

"It's Roelf!" Selina had cried. "Roelf. Little Roelf Pool!" Tears in her eyes. Dirk had been politely interested. But then he had never known him, really. He had heard his mother speak of him, but—

At seventeen Dirk and Selina talked of the year to come. He was going to a university. But to what university? And what did he want to study? We-e-ll, hard to say. Kind of a general course, wasn't there?

"Oh," Selina had said. "Yes. General. Of course, if a person wanted to be an architect, why, I suppose Cornell would be the place. Or Harvard for law. Or Boston Tech for engineering or—"

Oh, yeh, if a fellow wanted any of those things. Good idea, though, to take a kind of general course until you found out exactly what you wanted to do. Languages and literature and that kind of thing.

At eighteen, it had been Midwest university for Dirk. High Prairie heard that Dirk DeJong was going away to college. A neighbor's son said, "Going to Wisconsin? Agricultural course there."

"My gosh, no!" Dirk had answered. He told this to Selina, laughing. But she had not laughed.

"I'd like to take that course myself if you must know. They say it's wonderful." She looked at him, suddenly. "Dirk, you wouldn't like to take it, would you? To go to Madison. I mean. Is that what you'd like?"

He stared. "Me! No! . . . Unless you want me to, mother. Then I would, gladly. I hate your working like this, on the farm, while I go off to school. It makes me feel kind of rotten, having my mother working for me. The other fellows—"

"I'm doing the work I'm interested in, for the person I love best in the world. I'd be lost—unhappy—without the farm. If the city creeps up on me here, as they predict it will, I don't know what I shall do."

"Just you wait till I'm successful. Then there'll be no more working for you."

"What do you mean by 'successful,' Sobig?" She had not called him that in years. But now the old nickname came to her tongue perhaps because they were speaking of his future, his success. "What do you mean by 'successful,' Sobig?"

"Rich. Lots of money."

"No, no, Dirk! No! That's not success. Roelf—the thing Roelf does—that's success."

"Oh, well, if you have money enough you can buy the things he makes, and have 'em. That's almost as good isn't it?"

At Eighteen It Had Been Midwest University for Dirk.

Dirk commenced his studies at Midwest university in the autumn of 1909. His first year was none too agreeable, as is usually the case in first years. He got on well, though. Before the end of the first semester he was popular. He had great natural charm of manner. The men liked him, and the girls, too. He rarely "cut" a class. He would have felt that this was unfair and disloyal to his mother. Some of his fellow students joked about this faithfulness to his classes. "Person would think you were an Unclassified," they said.

The Unclassifieds were made up, for the most part, of earnest and rather middle-aged students whose education was a delayed blooming. They usually were not enrolled for a full course, or were taking double work feverishly.

The professors found them a shade too eager, perhaps; too inquiring; demanding too much. They stayed after class and asked innumerable questions. They bristled with interrogation. They were prone to hold forth in the classroom. "Well, I have found it to be the case in my experience that—"

But the professor preferred to do the lecturing himself. If there was to be any experience related it should come from the teacher's platform, not the student's chair.

In his first year Dirk made the almost fatal mistake of being rather friendly with one of these Unclassifieds—a female Unclassified, a large, good-humored, plump girl, about thirty-eight, with a shiny skin which she never powdered and thick hair that exuded a disagreeable odor of oil. She was sympathetic and jolly, but her clothes were a fright, the Classifieds would have told you, and no matter how cold the day there was always a half-moon of stain showing under her armpits. She had a really fine mind, quick, eager, balanced, almost judicial. She knew just which references were valuable, which useless. Her name was Schwengauer—Mattie Schwengauer. Terrible!

She and Dirk got in the way of walking out of the classroom together, across the campus. She told him something of herself.

"Your people farmers!" Surprised, she looked at his well-cut clothes, his slim, strong, unmarked hands, his smart shoes and cap. "Why, so are mine. Iowa." She pronounced it Ioway. "I lived on the farm all my life till I was twenty-seven. I always wanted to go away to school but we never had the money and I couldn't come to town to earn because I was the oldest, and Ma was sickly after Emma—that's the youngest—there are nine of us—was born. Ma was anxious I should go and Pa was willing, but it couldn't be. No fault of theirs. One year the summer would be so hot, with no rain hardly from spring till fall, and the corn would just dry up on the stalks, like paper. The next year it would be so wet the seed would rot in the ground. Ma died when I was twenty-six. The kids were all pretty well grown up by that time. Pa married again in a year. I came to Chicago about five years ago. . . . I've done all kinds of work, I guess, except digging in a coal mine. I'd have done that if I'd had to."

AZTEC VENICE

On the Chinampas Canal, Near Mexico City.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

ONE of the pleasurable experiences among those that delight the traveler in Mexico is a visit to the home of the Aztec lake dwellers. Much of the charm of the great Valley of Mexico, where they live, is due to the stretches of water among the trees and verdant fields in a landscape framed in beautiful mountains and bathed with clearest air of heaven.

Their lakes—Texcoco, Xochimilco, Zumpango and Chalco—do not reveal themselves except from the high mountains encircling the valley. They are shallow bodies of water in the midst of extensive marshes, unapproachable, and lacking the effect of our lakes with their definite shore-lines. For this reason they have never been highways of civilized commerce, nor has navigation flourished in their shallow waters; but they were from these very hindrances destined to be jealous mothers of ancient and remarkable states, whose people, protected in the fens, dug out canals and developed an indigenous commerce and transportation to the fullest extent.

They were for modern man a constant menace during seasons of flood and have required enormous engineering works to keep them in bounds. The first of these, never of great value, was begun some 300 years ago, and exists at the present time as a gigantic ditch over 13 miles long, 197 feet deep, and 861 feet wide, dug by the patient labor of impressed Indians, and called the Tajo de Nochistongo. The latest undertaking is a canal connecting the three lakes and leading their waters out of the valley by a tunnel through the eastern mountains. This splendid piece of engineering, completed some years ago, effectually controls the heights of the water in the lakes and prevents inundations.

But, long before Cortez came, the Indians of the valley worked in the boggy lake lands and dug canals hither and thither—main canals between the lakes and to the great city of Tenochtitlan and smaller canals between their fields. Through this maze of waterways, then as now, they sent their boats and in the fens built their thatched houses. Historically, Cortez was the first European boatbuilder in the New World, when of an imperious necessity he launched his brigantines, of quaint Sixteenth century pattern, if one may believe the artists, in the reeking waters of Texcoco at the spot near Huejutla where there is now a bridge called Puente de los Bergantines, not far from the capital.

Pere Sahagun, the Franciscan, records that "the City of Mexico is like another Venice, and the people themselves are comparable to the Venetians in urbanity and savoir." This was written in the Sixteenth century, but in the lapse of several hundred years the city's wonderful water environment has become dry ground, and the seeker for lake dwellers will have to look farther afield in the entrancing valley of the sky.

In the Field of Flowers

The way to the present Aztec Venice which bears the name of Xochimilco, "in the field of flowers," is through one of these ancient canals—a prehistoric water road from Tenochtitlan to the capital and seat of one of the group of seven Aztec tribes which long ago came from remote Aztlan to the rich Valley of Mexico.

The life on the canal, vivid and picturesque, is as striking now as it was then; it may even be suspected that the change from that time to this has not been very great. It is hard to get a start to the land of the fens in more ways than one—the negotiations for passage in a barge with boatmen who display the characteristics of that tribe known the world over; and the conflicting claims also of all the costumes, incidents, shipping, and so forth, of the boiling, squirming kaleidoscopic canal and shore population on its multifarious quests bewilder the beholder and make him forget that he is on a journey to see the lake dwellers in their primitive homes. Tardily, then, the barge comes into the clear pool in front of the medieval toll gate fortress, where all shipping must go under a low bridge and there the old time toll collector, armed with a pike, could threaten the recalcitrant without much effort vistas of a new world. On this canal, bordered with trees and spanned by quaint bridges, is a perfect stream of craft, from the slender dugout chaloupe to the square-bowed flatboat, hurrying on with everything to feed, repair, and adorn the great city.

The Indian boatmen, clad in white cotton shirts and trousers, are working with a will, sometimes wading in the canal and drawing the heavy-laden boats after them; and alas! returning to their paradise, a woman piloting her husband who is the worse for pulque.

Pictures Along the Canal.

There are pictures and pictures innumerable, full of human interest and checkered with a marvelous play of light, shadow, and reflection, as we pass by the gardens and openings of the larger and smaller canals. Here are embarkings and arrivals loading, unloading, and preparing to lay by for the night in a snug slip near where thatched houses play hide and seek in the luxuriant foliage; here a group of energetic washerwomen by the water margin, and there clouds of white or gaudy much-belabored clothes on the bushes. No secrets are here; all goes on with the pulsing, urging force of labor freely and openly before men.

One remembers gardeners and gardens in the sunny flower and vegetable plots and children peeping out on the canal highway from under umbrageous trees. Flotsam and jetsam in the canal are vagrant bulbs and flowers of water hyacinth, a wicked, beautiful plant, whose reproductivity makes men work to keep it down, but here it has met its match and is made to be useful. Bridges there are, and most quaint, like that perfect arch of Ixtlcalco, under which white geese seem to float in the air.

One feels that this panorama should last forever, especially if he does not have to supply the labor of locomotion. Here at this landing at Xochimilco it must be realized that the mere first leaves of our experience, the loveliness of the country of the lake dwellers, are just unfolding.

The town is really built on terra firma, as the seven churches, each well supplied with raucous bells, the streets of quaint houses, and the broad lava-paved prehistoric market place, well attest, but the town disguises and hides away the life of the canals and gardens, and its attractions for the tourist are soon compassed.

We turn into a narrow lane leading away from the formal streets and emerge into an Indian dooryard, and within a few feet of us is the main canal with its boats and floating water plants. The inhabitants of this little house group into which we have come as from another sphere are interested and friendly and ready to visit.

Making a Floating Garden

It is interesting to see lake dwellers constructing a "floating" garden, and one is carried back without effort several centuries into the past. From the canals the busy Aztecs throw great masses of water hyacinth upon the strip of bog to the thickness of a foot or more. The water hyacinth, which unfortunately does not fit into the ancient picture, is provided with large cellular floats—a natural provision for its dissemination, which has made it an obstruction to navigation in some rivers of southern United States.

Upon this bed of floats they spread a layer of muck dredged from the bottom of the canals. Perhaps before the plant floats have decayed, these gardens may drift away should the water rise. Even now on portions of the lake square miles of vegetation cover the surface like the "sudd" of the Nile and the canal roads have to be staked at the sides to keep them from disappearing. Great drifts of microscopic vegetation cover the stagnant water of the open lakes with a mantle lovely in color, while the bottom is coral red from a weed that thrives in the water.

The term "floating gardens" was properly applied by the early historians of Mexico to masses of water reeds covered with a layer of rushes bearing a thin layer of soil, employed by the Mexicans at a period when the fluctuating waters of the lakes prevented the formation of permanent chinampas, and so in the New World the Indians repeated the famed gar-

Starboard.

The word starboard is probably derived from steer board, and became identified with the side of the ship to the right of a person at the steer board and facing the bow. The word larboard was used to designate the side to the left. This term has been superseded by the word port, in order to avoid the confusion caused by the similarity of names.

Let's Get a 92-Scoring Butter!

It is very important to deliver your cream twice a week in order to get a 92-scoring butter.

All our butter is scored and inspected by the Government Inspector and whatever score he places on our butter is the basis on which the Creameries Ass'n makes payment.

Cream a week old will never make butter scoring 92 even tho it is sweet. Our biggest trouble is with old flavor which shows up in butter a week or so after it is made.

It is very encouraging the way our patrons have realized the necessity of delivering their cream twice a week yet some seem to think that as long as their cream is sweet it will make the highest grade butter.

Co-operate with us and you will get more money for your butterfat. In this way only we will get a 92-scoring butter.

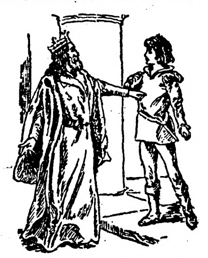
The Sandman Story

THE FAITHFUL PRINCE

ONCE upon a time there lived a king who had three sons and as they were all brought on the same day by the stork the king could not decide to which one to leave his crown.

The king had great wealth in jewels, bags of gold and a vast kingdom. In one room in the stronghold under his castle he placed all of his bags of gold. In another room he placed all of his jewels and in the third room he placed a pearl casket and in this he put a scroll on which he wrote that all his vast kingdom should go to the son who proved worthy.

Then the king called to him his three sons, whose names were Rollo, Carlos and Zallito, and to each he gave a key which fitted the three doors in the stronghold.



In the Room He Had Been Charged Not to Enter.

To Carlos was given the key to the room in which the gold was stored, to Rollo the key to the jewel room and to Zallito the key which unlocked the door to the room where stood the casket.

"I am getting to be an old man," said the king to his sons, "and the time is not far off when one of you must reign in my place. I am going on a journey and if at the end of one year I do not return unlock the doors which your keys fit in the stronghold of the castle."

One old and trusted servant shared the king's secret and took food to him and attended to his needs.

For awhile all went well. Every day the three brothers went to the stronghold and dusted the keyhole of the door to which they held the key and went away without anything happening.

But one day while the king watched from his secret hiding place he noticed that Zallito as he dusted tried to peek through the keyhole into the secret chamber.

"He," said the king, "is not the one to rule after me."

But not only Zallito was getting impatient, his brother Carlos had once slyly tried the latch of his door to find if by chance it had been left unlocked and the king from his hiding place had seen with a sad heart that he had another son to whom he did not wish to leave his crown.

Now he had only one son left. Would Rollo stand the test? There were only two months left in which to prove he was worthy and the king with anxious eyes watched day by day.

On the morning of the third day the king appeared at the breakfast table and after greeting Zallito and Carlos asked, "Where is your brother Rollo?"

"Alas, we dread to tell you, father," said Zallito, "for we know how it will grieve you when you learn the truth.

"Three days ago we found Rollo in the stronghold unlocking the door to the room you had charged him to care for until your return and we have locked him in there that you may see for yourself he has proven unfaithful to the trust."

For reply the king said. "We will go at once and open the door."

Poor Rollo, faint from want of food, lay on the floor of the room when the door was thrown open. The king commanded his servants to carry him up the stairs and give him food.

After a little time the king asked, "How did you happen to be in the room I charged you not to enter, my son?"

"Have my brothers not told you?" inquired Rollo.

"Yes," replied the king, "but I wish to hear your story as well."

"My story would count for little against that of my two brothers, father," replied the prince. "You found me inside the room to which I held the key, I am sorry; that is all I have to say."

"I am sorry also, but not for you, my son, but for your two faithless brothers who could not be trusted to keep faith with their father and who have stooped to treachery to place their brother in a false light."

"You, my son Rollo, shall become king and rule after me, and if in your heart you can find pity for your faithless brothers they may live on your bounty."

Rollo forgave them and promised them a living which was much more than they deserved and then the king told them how he had watched day by day from his hiding place in the wall and had seen everything that had taken place.

Two shamefaced princes left the stronghold with the king and one very happy-faced prince; and though it was many years before Rollo became king, when he did he had no trouble with the two brothers who tried so hard to disgrace him.

When knaves such as Zallito and Carlos find they are discovered in such wrong-doings they are usually as submissive to the one in power as they were overbearing and wicked.

Something to Think About

By F. A. WALKER

SLOWING DOWN

WHEN we of normal health and strength begin to proceed more slowly than is our wont, put off attending to our customary duties and neglect to fill each day with a full day's work, the inference is that we are taking a step on the downward path.

Pleasant as these steps are in the beginning, they soon become the cause of untold sorrows, from which in later life it is frequently impossible to escape.

A musician who fails to practice daily soon loses his dexterity. His mind becomes sluggish, his fingers clumsy and his eyes less alert.

So it is in any other profession or in craftsmanship.

The man or woman who shows signs of slowing down is making the first step toward going down. In a little while this is observed in changed attitudes of thought and action. The world is seen from a new viewpoint. Any effort to recover lost ground is fatiguing.

There is no more delight in the old chase, no joyous inspiration in seeking to excel our own best efforts.

We have become inert and indifferent. To make an unusual gesture is wearisome to the flesh. To lure from its lair some great idea which shall set the world agog is impossible, for we are descending to the lowlands where resourcefulness has perished and hope lies buried beyond our reach.

As compared with eternity, life is but an existence of a moment, but it is our duty to make the best of it by being always active in climbing the high hills, which take us a little nearer the heavens.

And when we close our eyes in the final sleep we shall have the sweet consciousness of having never turned back, having never lost our faith nor hesitated in the doing of our duties as we understood them, though at times the paths were hard and our hearts were troubled with doubts and fears.

The Why of Superstitions

By H. IRVING KING

PLANTING GOURDS

ACCORDING to the Journal of American Folklore Society there exists in Tennessee a quite common belief that in order to raise a good crop of gourds a certain ceremony is necessary with regard to the seed before it is planted. Perhaps the same superstition exists in other parts of the country. It is a most interesting superstition and suggests a survival from devil worship or at least an appeal to the "gods of the underworld."

The gourd seeds must be thrown over the left shoulder by the man who is to plant them and he must utter an oath as each seed is thrown. It will be noticed that the direction in which the seeds are thrown is from right to left or "against the sun," a movement which typifies a retrogression into the realm of the spirits of darkness as the "ceremonial circuit" or sunwise movement typified a progress in conformity with the sun-god, the giver of life and light, the beneficent influence.

Instead of being planted with a prayer for increase to the beneficent sun-god the seed is planted with blasphemy calculated to appeal to the powers of evil, those gods whose dark Plutonian realm was conceived as lying in subterranean regions and therefore, naturally gods fitting to be appealed to in behalf of seeds con[illegible] to a dark and subterranean place of germination. Survivals of this sort are rare. In the superstitions, of agriculture especially, it is generally the beneficent forces that are appealed to.

THE TEMPLE

THEY call me vain because I take good care
Of this my body, and to keep it fair
And fit to house my Soul forever try,
And on external things keep watchful eye.
Well—vain am I, perhaps. I'm satisfied
I'll not deny that I've a taste for pride,
But since I've got a Soul that gives to me
A chance to win true Immortality
I'm going to see that in this world of din
It has a Temple well worth living in,
As free of squalor as the House of Kings,
As haply doth befit Immortal Things.

"What's in a Name?"

By MILDRED MARSHALL

Facts about your name; its history; meaning; whence it was derived; significance; your lucky day, lucky jewel

CLAIRE

CLAIRE was originally a masculine name. Generally spelled Clare, it was first used in England to name a Norman family who came from one of the villages of St. Clair. "Red De Clare," stout Gloucester's earl, the foe of Henry III, was one of them.

The son of Red De Clare married into the House of Geraldin in Ireland and received from Edward I a grant of lands, now known as County Clare. His heiress carried the county to the De Burghs and their heiress married Lionel, son of Edward III, thus making the county a dukedom and creating the title, the duke of Clarence.

The feminine form is said to have arisen in Italy as Chiara and spread into France, where it was immediately changed into Claire. Though preferring the original Clare, the English accepted Claire and it gained some vogue there, but in this country it was adopted with enthusiasm and has undergone widespread usage.

The diamond is Claire's talismanic jewel. It promises her brilliant attainments, magnetism, and courage. Saturday is her lucky day and 6 her lucky number.

THE KITCHEN CABINET

(©, 1925, Western Newspaper Union.)

There is so little rest! There is such an unreasoning passion for activity. And so we skim the surface of all things; we never look down into their depths and see the power, of help and culture which they might contain.—Phillips Brooks.

EVERYDAY FOODS

Nearly everybody will eat and enjoy a good meat pie, if it is well seasoned and properly baked. In a small family there are always left-over meats that may be used in such a pie. For chicken add the gravy, a little thin cream or milk to the bits of meat, cover with baking powder biscuit and bake. Be sure that the chicken is boiling hot when putting on the biscuit, as this will insure them from being soggy, or soaked.

A bit of chopped onion, parsley or a bit of a clove of garlic may be added to a meat pie, making it more appetizing.

Dutch Pot Pie.—Cut into dice one-half pound of smoked ham, cook slowly until well-heated, then add six sliced potatoes, three onions sliced; cook a few minutes with the ham, then add three pints of boiling water. Cover with biscuits made from buttermilk and baking powder, as they are especially light and flaky.

California Eggs.—Have eight hard cooked eggs cut lengthwise. Parboil the tips of a bunch of asparagus. Butter a baking dish, put the eggs into it cut-side up, cover with the asparagus, then add the remaining eggs, yolks down. Prepare a white sauce, using cream and the liquor from the asparagus. Pour this over the dish, sprinkle with seasoning and well-buttered crumbs and bake fifteen minutes.

Breakfast Tomato.—Hollow out small tomatoes and fill with the following: Drop a raw egg into each tomato, season with salt and pepper and cover with two slices of bacon. Add a bit of worcestershire sauce to each, skewer the bacon with toothpicks and bake in a hot oven twenty minutes.

If you have a little ginger bread left over, or any plain cake, steam it and serve with a lemon or vinegar sauce, for dessert. Use one cupful of sugar, a tablespoonful of flour, one-half cupful of boiling water, a grating of nutmeg and two tablespoonfuls of vinegar or lemon juice. Add a teaspoonful of butter, just before serving.

Add a teaspoonful of sugar to peas, or roast or stewed meats; it adds to the flavor.

Variety of Good Things.

Every little while some one asks for a recipe for Scotch short bread. It is too rich for daily food, but will be enjoyed occasionally; it is nice served with a cup of tea.

Scotch Short Bread.—Take two pounds of flour, one pound of butter, one-half pound of sugar and two beaten eggs, a grating of nutmeg and a teaspoonful of grated lemon peel. Mix and roll one-half inch thick. Prick with a fork and bake in a hot oven.

Breakfast Toast.—Melt three tablespoonfuls of butter in a frying pan. Cut bread into one-fourth-inch slices and cut each into squares. Lay these in melted butter. Beat four eggs well; add salt, paprika and pepper to season with one-half cupful of milk; pour over the bread. Cook until well-browned on the bottom, then turn each piece with a spatula and brown on the other side. Serve hot.

Arabian Ambrosia.—This sounds good enough for any occasion, but is a most simple and easy-to-prepare dessert. Measure two cupfuls of choice dates, wipe them carefully and remove the pits. Cut the dates into quarters and combine with one cupful of walnut meats coarsely chopped; add one tablespoonful of lemon juice and arrange the mixture in sherbet glasses; top with a spoonful of whipped cream, or marshmallow cream.

Fruitines.—Beat two eggs and add one and one-half cupfuls of sugar, one-half cupful of softened butter and a teaspoonful of salt. Soak one cupful of raisins in two tablespoonfuls of orange or any fruit juice for an hour, then put through the meat grinder. Mix and sift three and one-half cupfuls of pastry flour; add the fruit juice, one teaspoonful of soda, two tablespoonfuls of milk, one teaspoonful of cinnamon and one-half teaspoonful of cloves. Mix all together and beat well; add the raisins and drop by teaspoonfuls on a baking sheet, two inches apart. Bake eight to ten minutes. This recipe makes about fifty cookies.

Chop Suey.—Take one-half pound of lean veal, cut into pieces, two cupfuls of celery, one-half cupful of onions cut fine, one can of bean sprouts and three tablespoonfuls of Chinese sauce. Heat the mazola, cook the meat in it until done but not brown, add the celery and onions and cook until well-heated through, but not soft. Add meat stock or water from the bean sprouts to cook the vegetables. To one cupful of broth add two tablespoonfuls of cornstarch to make the gravy; season well, add the chop suey sauce and serve hot.

The DAIRY

PROPER FEEDING OF BULL IS IMPORTANT

Proper feeding of the herd bull is just as important as the proper feeding of the milk cows. Too often the spoiled or musty hay is put to one side to be fed to the bull. Again we find dairymen giving the waste feed, left by other animals, to the herd sire. All of which is a very poor practice, writes R. D. Canan in the Indiana Farmer's Guide.

The herd bull old enough for service should be fed enough to keep him in a vigorous, healthy condition, free from any excess fat. Most breeders feed their regular grain mixture to the bull at the rate of four to ten pounds daily depending upon the size and condition of the animal and the variety of roughage. A good grain mixture to use consists of three parts ground corn, three parts ground oats, three parts wheat bran, and one part linseed oil meal. Ground oats are especially good for bulls. Cottonseed meal is generally looked upon with disfavor, since it may cause impotency.

Legume hay, whenever available, should be fed at the rate of ten to twenty pounds a day. Legumes are high in protein and mineral matter, and will keep the heavily used bull in excellent condition. When nonlegume roughages, such as timothy hay, fodder or straw are fed, it is necessary to feed more linseed oil meal than with the legume roughages.

Breeders differ as to the breeding powers of the bull when silage is fed. Silage fed in large amounts will have a tendency to distend the paunch, which is very undesirable. However, ten to fifteen pounds of silage daily may be safely fed along with other roughages.

It is essential that the herd bull receive plenty of water, and where it has been found necessary to keep the bull in a stall or pen, he should be watered at least twice a day.

The value and importance of using good bulls is essential to the economical development of the dairy industry. The present use of good bulls is entirely too limited, and when a good bull is once in service his usefulness may be prolonged for an indefinite period through proper feeding and plenty of exercise.

Milk Flow Falls Off in Fly Weather in Summer

Flies on the cows on hot days often cause an actual decrease in milk production. A good fly spray, correctly applied, will not only quiet the cows and help the milk run freely, but will also save the temper of the milker.

A good spray for this purpose can easily be made at home, according to the cow men of the New York State College of Agriculture at Ithaca. The ingredients are 4½ quarts coal tar dip; 4½ quarts fish oil; 3 quarts coal oil; 3 quarts whale oil; 1½ quarts oil of tar.

Dissolve three pounds of laundry soap in water, add the ingredients of the spray, and bring up to 30 gallons with lukewarm soft water.

This spray, applied twice a day—in the morning after milking and in the afternoon while the cows are in the barn for silage or other green feed—will keep the flies away and keep the hair coats of the cows soft.

Thirty gallons of this mixture will spray forty cows twice a day for six days, at a cost of one cent a cow a day. Two men with a portable half-barrel cart carrying a spray pump and nozzle can spray forty cows in five minutes.

Danger in Cross-Breeding

Cross-breeding in reality is a two-edged sword. One cannot mate a Holstein cow with a Guernsey bull and expect the female progeny to take on a type or evidence a function or produce milk with the quality of the Guernsey and the quantity of the Holstein. Actually, straight cross-bred animals of this mating are quite as apt to inherit the quality of the Holstein and the quantity of the Guernsey. It is difficult, indeed, to establish a type under such circumstances.

Feeding Cows Minerals

A dairy cow giving a large flow of milk will need some added minerals if she is to be properly nourished. Especially is this true if she does not get legume hay, wheat bran, wheat middlings, cottonseed meal or linseed meal in her ration. Milk contains a large amount of lime and phosphorus which makes it necessary for the cow to get a liberal supply in her ration if she is to continue to produce milk very long.

Treat Warts on Teats

Bathe warts on cows' teats several times daily with warm water containing a tablespoonful of washing soda per pint, or immerse the teats in the solution for five minutes or more, night and morning. After the evening immersion cover the affected parts with a thick paste of cold-pressed castor oil, salt, and flowers of sulphur. Warts that have slim necks may be nipped off with blunt scissors, a few at a time, and tincture of iodine applied.

Unknown Area Will Be Explored

Science Expects Much From Expedition.

Washington.—Scientific information of high value will accrue from the exploration of the world's biggest unknown area by the MacMillan Arctic expedition under the auspices of the National Geographic society with the active co-operation of the navy, according to a bulletin issued at the society's Washington headquarters.

"Data which will be collected by members of the expedition and observations made by the United States navy flyers are of potential value to navigators, farmers and fishermen," the bulletin explains.

"The major geographical fact is that the huge unexplored area, a million square miles, lies between two American flags, that which flies over Alaska, and that which Peary planted at the North pole. In this area, more than three times the size of Texas, there is the possibility of a new continent being discovered, and the probability of land of some kind.

Why Land Is Expected.

"The existence of this land is postulated on reports of explorers who have skirted the edges of the unknown area, and of observations of tides and ice conditions along this fringe, which conditions indicate the existence of land.

"Should such land exist it will be of great future economic importance in view of the commercial flying that, in years to come, will be done across the Arctic regions.

"The combination of aircraft and radio in Arctic exploration is a new feature of exploration, which not only adds romance and adventure to the undertaking, but which enhances the scientific value of the expedition.

"Hitherto our information about the Far North has been from explorers who had to penetrate it in winter, when the ice was continuous; summer flying makes possible observations of entirely different conditions, with 24 hours of daylight to aid the flyers.

"This same daylight, however, as radio fans will realize, is a handicap to broadcasting, because night time is radio time. The use of the new short wave-length apparatus, under these conditions, is an experiment which will be of value to the new science of wireless communication.

"Upper air temperatures in the Far North are almost as little known as the million square miles which may shroud a long-hidden continent. Summer records of these conditions not only will have a value to future flying but may have a direct bearing on weather forecasting.

"Forecasting weather consists largely in detecting new disturbances as they show up on the western and northwestern borders of the United States, learning their characteristics, and figuring out the paths they probably will follow because of prevailing barometric pressures and temperatures ahead of them.

Tracking Weather to Its Lair.

"The great majority of what the weather forecasters call the 'lows'—that is the areas of subnormal barometric pressure—seem to originate over the warm sea south of the Aleutian islands in the winter, and over the interior of Alaska during the summer. But some of the conditions which cause these 'lows' to be 'built up' in those places and create 'highs' to the east have their birth farther north in the polar regions, and a better knowledge of temperatures, pressure and wind changes there undoubtedly would facilitate weather forecasting.

"In the search for the beginnings of its weather the United States is not concerned with the entire polar regions. It is most concerned, it happens, with the unexplored territory which lies north of Alaska.

"Temperatures, pressures and wind conditions—the vital weather factors—are not known in the regions north from Alaska to the pole. Exploration of this area is a preliminary to making detailed observations of these conditions which directly affect farms and orchards of the United States."

Speaking of the navy's part in the expedition, Dr. Gilbert Grosvenor, president of the National Geographic society, said:

"Two of the outstanding men of their generations in the history of polar explorations were officers of the United States navy—Charles Wilkes, who discovered the Antarctic continent on January 19, 1840, and Robert E. Peary, who attained the North pole on April 6, 1909.

"It is a matter of pride to the members of the National Geographic society that the monuments to Peary and Wilkes in the Arlington National cemetery were placed there by their society.

"With these two names may be grouped other navy men whose enterprise and daring have added to our knowledge of the world. Among them are Charles Francis Hall, who pushed north from Thank God Harbor to within less than eight degrees of the North pole in October, 1871; George W. DeLong, who lost his life in polar work; William Francis Lynch, who in 1848 conducted a valuable official survey of the Jordan river and the Dead sea; Matthew Calbraith Perry, who so diplomatically opened Japan to the outside world in 1853, and Thomas Oliver Selfridge who conducted surveys for a canal across the Isthmus of Panama in 1869-73."

MRS. HENRY HOLLISTER
WYANDOTTE, MICHIGAN
Wyandotte, Michigan.—"After my baby was born I did not do my own work for six months and could hardly take care of my own baby. I always had a pain in my right side and it was so bad I was getting round shoulders. I would feel well one day and then feel so bad for three or four days that I would be in bed. One Sunday my mother came to see how I was, and she said a friend told her to tell me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. So the next day I got a bottle and before it was half taken I got relief. After I was well again I went to the doctor and he asked me how I was getting along. I told him I was taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and he said it did not hurt any one to take it. I am always recommending the Vegetable Compound to others and I always have a bottle of it on hand."—Mrs. HENRY HOLLISTER, R. F. D. No. 1, Box 7, Wyandotte, Michigan.
Another Woman's Case
St. Paul, Minnesota.—"I have a little girl three years old and ever since her birth I have suffered with my back as if it were breaking in two, and bearing-down pains all the time. I also had dizzy spells. I had read several letters of women in the newspapers, and the druggist recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to my husband for me. As a result of taking it my back has stopped aching and the awful bearing-down feeling is gone. I feel stronger and do all of my housework and tend to my little girl. I have also taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Liver Pills for constipation. I have recommended these medicines to some of my friends and you may use this letter as a testimonial if you wish. I will be pleased to answer letters of other women if I can help them by telling them what this medicine has done for me."—Mrs. PRICE, 147 West Summit Avenue, St. Paul, Minnesota.

The original seed of the honeydew melon is said to have been obtained from a melon shipped from Africa to New York city. As yet this melon has not been brought into a stable condition of reproduction.

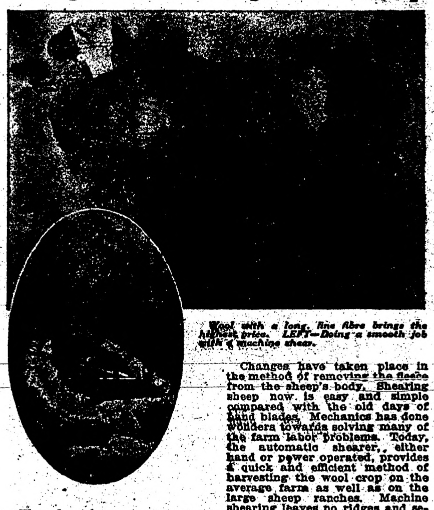
Changes in Harvesting the Wool Crop



Wool with a long, fine fibre brings the highest price. LEFT—Doing a smooth job with a machine shear.

There have been many changes in the operations of securing the wool crop. It has not been many years since it was considered necessary to clean the wool before it was taken from the sheep. This used to be done by driving the flock to a lake or stream where each animal was thoroughly washed. Modern methods of wool scouring have made sheep-washing unnecessary, although even today, a very dirty fleece is discriminated against by the buyer.

There are certain precautions observed by successful sheep owners at shearing time which have been found to increase the value of the clip. For example, bright days are selected on which to shear, as this will avoid obtaining fleeces wet with dew or rain. Do not shear sheep on the ground, but rather use a clean platform upon which to do the shearing operation. Keep the fleece in one piece, and clip off some of the inferior tags.

Changes have taken place in the method of removing the fleece from the sheep's body. Shearing sheep now is easy and simple compared with the old days of hand blades. Mechanics has done wonders towards solving many of the farm labor problems. Today, the automatic shearer, either hand or power operated, provides a quick and efficient method of harvesting the wool crop on the average farm as well as on the large sheep ranches. Machine shearing leaves no ridges and secures the maximum amount of fleece which is very important with wool at present prices.

For tying up each fleece, use, if possible, a paper twine. If binder twine is used, experience has shown that the fibres of the twine get into the wool, and as they cannot be removed, they are a damage to the resulting manufactured woolen goods. In preparing wool for shipment, large sacks which will hold several fleeces are used.

The program of sheep owners should include plans for most effectively harvesting a quality wool. The wool crop will be a large source of income this year, as it will be for years to come. High prices are being offered for the 1925 clip; and extremely satisfactory returns are assured. The changes that have taken place in the methods of harvesting wool are of great value to the sheep industry.

Breadfruit.

The breadfruit, with the coconut and banana, furnishes the chief food of the natives of the Pacific islands. That is why we call it "breadfruit," because, for them, it takes the place of bread. Apart from its fruit, the tree itself is a very useful one, for, when beaten out, the inner bark forms a fine white cloth called tapa cloth.

Care of Hides.

Only sound hides free from cuts on the flesh side, well taken off, of regular even pattern, properly salted and cured, can command a high price and make good leather. Greater care must be taken in summer than in winter in salting, curing and marketing hides, especially by the farmer or the country butcher who has only an occasional hide to cure. Partly decayed hides are practically useless.

Strain on Human Body.

In hot weather the human body makes an extraordinary effort to adapt itself to conditions and meet the strain placed upon it. Violent overheating or great physical effort for a few hours causes the body to throw off some four liters of fluid. In other words, the perspiration secreted in a brief while is greater than the entire blood supply of the body.

All our butter is scored and inspected by the Government Inspector and whatever score he places on our butter is the basis on which the Creameries' Ass'n makes payment. Cream a week old will never make butter scoring 92 even tho it is sweet. Our biggest trouble is with old flavor which shows up in butter a week or so after it is made.

It is very encouraging the way our patrons have realized the necessity of delivering their cream twice a week yet some seem to think that as long as their cream is sweet it will make the highest grade butter,

AMERICA'S AMAZING PROGRESS IN THE PAST HUNDRED YEARS

Material Progress Staggers the Imagination, but Real Wealth Is in the Character of the People Inherited From the Pilgrim Fathers.

By WALTER W. HEAD, President The American Bankers Association

Walter W. Head

One hundred years ago when Lafayette re-visited America, he found the United States a nation of little more than ten million people—less than one-tenth of the present number. The territory embraced less than 1,800,000 square miles instead of the present 3,700,000. Half was still a wilderness of unsettled plain, plateau and mountains.

Only one hundred years ago, the world was still agog over the recent passage of the "Savannah," an American sailing vessel equipped with paddle-wheels propelled by steam, from New York to Liverpool in twenty-six days. Today we boast of a trans-Atlantic airplane crossing that required but few more hours than the "Savannah" required days.

One hundred years ago the total national wealth was less than a billion dollars, less than $100 per capita; today the national wealth exceeds 300 billion dollars—an average of almost $3,000 per capita. In 1821 there were ten savings banks with 8,635 depositors, with $1,138,000 on deposit; one hundred years later—more than thirty million depositors had more than $18,000,000,000 savings deposits. The total receipts of the federal government in 1823 were $20,500,000, the total expenditures were $14,700,000. Last year our national income and expenditures each exceeded $3,500,000,000.

One hundred years ago there were no railroads, no automobiles, no airplanes. There were no telephones, no telegraph lines, no cables. There was no gasoline, no kerosene.

There are those among us who regard the present as a period confronted with unprecedented problems, a period beset by perils heretofore unequaled. There are those who express doubt of our ability to make further progress—some even who profess to foresee the destruction and disintegration of our social, political and economic structure. In the light of achievements that have been wrought in the past by firm adherence to true principles, in the light of the tremendous resources our country now controls, what justification can men have today for expressing doubt of America's future?

America's Resources Today.

We have today 110,000,000 people. Our total bank deposits aggregate approximately 40 billion dollars. Outstanding life insurance amounts to more than 70 billion dollars. Our 500 million acres of improved farm lands are valued at 77 billion dollars. We have wealth untold in our forests, in our mines of iron and coal. We have more than 250,000 miles of railroad with which to transport ourselves and our articles of commerce; we have more than 250,000 miles of commercial telegraph lines and 800,000 miles of telephone lines to afford us communication; we have 20,000 daily and weekly newspapers to disseminate information and to bind our people together by ties of common knowledge and for a common purpose. We have resources of labor so abundant that we have placed an artificial check upon immigration.

These things are our material resources. They constitute the basic material element — but the real foundation of our progress is not material. It is that other, more valuable resource—the capacity and character of our people. To that we owe the discovery and development of our natural resources, their use and their conservation; to that we owe the establishment and development of a nation founded on ideals of equal rights, ideals of equal opportunity, ideals of equal responsibility, which remain today untarnished, which now shine forth with greater luster than ever before.

The Character of Our People

From it have come the patience and the wisdom which have reconciled effective authority and adequate liberty. From it has come the tolerance which has preserved freedom of speech, of press and of pulpit. From it has come the foresight which established free public schools. From it has come the courage which commanded adherence to principle at the cost of selfish gain, even at the cost of life itself. From it has come the respect for the rights and privileges of one's fellow man which has found expression in guaranties of equal representation and universal suffrage.

The character of our people is a spring which has never run dry. It has had its source ever and always in the stern and firm faith of the Pilgrim fathers—a political faith based upon and grounded in the tenets of the Christian religion. Despite every other influence, the strong and steady current of the Pilgrim's faith has persisted through generation after generation.

It is this invaluable resource—the capacity and character of our people—that has made America great in the past, that will make America greater and more powerful in the future. As long as we uphold our established standards of belief and conduct, we need have no fear for the future of America.

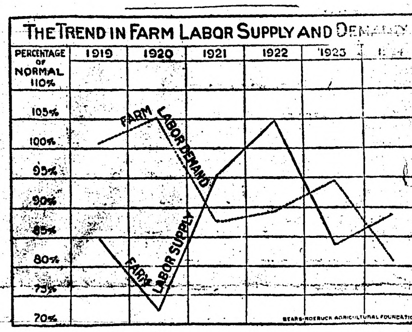
THE TREND IN FARM LABOR SUPPLY AND DEMAND



Farmers are cutting down hired help. The demand is estimated at only 85 per cent of normal as compared with 95 per cent a year ago, according to a statement issued by the Washington office of the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation based on data from government sources. The low purchasing power of farm products has forced the farmer to rearrange his operations. He is coming to depend largely on his own and his family's labor. In many cases the hired man is being dispensed with entirely.

Farm help costs more today than at any other time in the past sixty-one years. Wages demanded are higher than a year ago and rates for 1923 averaged above all preceding years. The peak year in the wage scale was in 1920. That year labor was scarce. According to the accompanying chart, in June of 1920 the supply was but 73 per cent of normal, while the demand was 105 per cent of normal. During the latter half of 1920 and through the first six months of 1921, the labor supply curve took a sudden upward swing, and in June of 1921 it was 95 per cent of normal, while demand had dropped to 87 per cent. Until in June of 1922 the supply curve continued to rise, reaching its height at 105 per cent of normal, while the demand was but 89 per cent normal.

With the beginning of 1923 city labor wages improved. Large industrial centers drew farm help cityward. Farmers had to pay wages out of proportion to what the farm could earn to hold their men. In June of 1923 the demand saw 95 per cent of normal, while the supply curve was sagging to 84 per cent. The latter half of the year demand lessened, due to excessive labor costs and the increasing supply. This year demand has made still further decline, until now it is but 81 per cent of normal, while labor supply, which is gradually increasing, is estimated around 89 per cent.

ALTERS POSITION OF GENEVA MEET

Small Latin Nations Object To Any Prohibition Of Export Of Armaments.

Geneva.—Manifestation of the influence of the Latin-American states marked in an outstanding manner the first week of the conference for the control of international trade in armaments. This influence of a section of the world whose countries are practically all the members of the League of Nations was demonstrated Saturday, when, under its leadership, the conference declared for the doctrine of the equality of all countries great and small in the right to possess and acquire armaments.

Concretely this declaration took the form of insisting that fundamentally there be no prohibition of the exportation of arms to governments constitutionally established. This changes the whole starting point of the conference. The draft convention, which was prepared carefully by experts after two years' study, hinges on the understanding plainly set forth in the second article that the powers will interdict the exportation of arms except under conditions which are outlined in succeeding clauses. These clauses permit the sale of arms to duly recognized governments under a system of license and publication of all details.

The conference, after a lively debate, went on record for liberty of exportation under suitable restrictions and on the condition that all sales to foreign individuals will be forbidden.

As several of the delegates remarked, this action radically changes the form of the convention, but does not really affect its essentials, provided the principle of liberty to export be sufficiently fenced around with protective clauses to permit attainment of the conference's goal, which is destruction of illicit traffic and international publicity on all legal trade.

For France, M. Boncour insisted that this liberty should not be permitted to conflict with the internal legislation of importing states with reference to restrictions on the importation of arms.

KENNEDY ELECTED VET HEAD

Officials Declare Blockade to Be Extended Even Further.

New York.—Wireless reports from the rum row blockade zone to Captain W. V. E. Jacobs, commandant of the coast guard at New York, told of signs of the disintegration of the whisky armada that has been off the mid-Atlantic coast on and off, ever since the prohibition law went into effect. The messages coincided with reports received at the New York dry fleet headquarters, stating that several of the largest vessels had pulled up their anchors and departed because of their enforced holiday since the blockade went into effect a week ago Tuesday.

Patrols and converted submarine chasers of the dry fleet bobbed along through the fog after the departing craft, to make sure they moved seaward, and not merely to new positions on the row. It was not known where the contraband carriers were bound.

With the arrival of the fog—the blockade was conducted with all conditions favoring the government forces—the guardsmen increased their forces, a dozen patrols and a few chasers, some of them with new engines capable of 35 knots an hour, went out to the blockade zone.

Grand Forks, N. D.—Resolutions requesting congress to amend the World war veterans act of 1924 so as to eliminate all limitation dates including those for the filing of service connection evidence and for the conversion of war risk insurance were adopted at the fifth annual convention of the North Dakota department of disabled American veterans of the World war, held here Saturday.

Decentralization of the United States Veterans bureau as so far carried out was approved and completion of the program requested. C. T. Hoverson, manager of the regional office at Fargo, was given a vote of confidence and appreciation for his work in obtaining justice for both the government and the disabled.

New Company to Back Forks Fair.

Grand Forks, N. D.—Formation of a corporation, with an authorized capital of $250,000, to hold the stock in both the state and county fair associations of Grand Forks, has been approved by the creditors of the former organization as a means of financing the fair. The plan will be put before the Grand Forks Commercial club as a community enterprise. The directors are expected to act on the matter at their meeting. With the proceeds of the proposed stock sale obligations could be liquidated.

PLAN BIG BUDGET SLASH

Levy Cut to Depend on Surplus is Now Estimated Near $100,000,000.

Washington — President Coolidge's drive for economy in federal expenditures will result in another substantial cut in the annual budget. He hopes the reduction will be as great as $300,000,000, making total estimates to be submitted to the next congress around $3,000,000,000.

Present budget estimates for the year beginning next June 3 are for $3,267,000,000, exclusive of the post-office department, but including public debt requirements. These appropriations already have been made.

Budget Director H. M. Lord is returning to Washington and will begin the drafting of the next budget in conference with the President.

The treasury soon can supply the budget with additional figures as to the probable surplus for the current fiscal year, a surplus that now promises to be about $100,000,000. It likewise will be in a position to forecast more definitely the receipts that may be counted on from taxes in the fisca year beginning July 1. The treasurer already counts on a cut of about $60,000,000 in expenditures through additional retirement of war bonds.

NEW FLEET PATROLS COAST

Ships Face Aerial Patrol—25 More Armed Vessels Join Blockade.

New York—Sixty-four heavily armed coast guards boats with 13 seapanes as auxiliary, the greatest dry armada in history, patrolled this section of the Atlantic coast, the second of the war against the modern pirates of rum row.

Eighteen more crafts steamed out of the Clifton Bay, Staten Island, coast guard base to join the 21 that opened the offensive. Earlier a fleet of 25 craft had joined the New York fleet from Boston and other New England points.

Operations of the entire fleet are being directed by means of code wireless messages from Washington to the coast guard cutter Mojave, which, by reason of its size and speedy, powerful engines, and crew of 70 men, has been made the flagship of the armada.

JUDGMENT TO BE SPEED GUIDE

Washington — Washington's new code of traffic regulation, a composite of the best methods adopted by other cities throughut the country, is in effect. The new rules which are built around the idea of the greatest speed possible commensurate with the greatest safety, are expected to serve as a model for the rest of the country.

To facilitate the movement of traffic, the speed limit has been raised from 18 to 22 miles an hour. Through streets are to be designated and plainly marked on which greater speeds will be permitted, running as high as 35 miles an hour on certain arterial thoroughfares leading to trunk highways in the outlying sections.

King Haakon to Send Minister.

Minneapolis—King Haakon of Norway will not be able to attend the Norse-American centennial in the Twin Cities in June, according to information received from the department of state at Washington. A letterd to Governor Christian from Frank B. Kellogg, confirms previous unofficial dispatches to the effect that King Haakon would be unable to come to the celebration. Secretary Kellogg's letter states that the king has instructed his minister at Washington to represent him at the celebration.

U. S. ASKS BAN ON GAS IN WAR

America Pushes Move Begun at Washington Parley, but Not Yet Signed by France.

Geneva—British proposal to exclude the sale of warships from the plan of international control of traffic in armaments met with the opposition of the French and Scandinavian delegates to the international conference in a secret session of the military and naval committee. The American delegation did not express any views on the project but there apparently was a tendency to take the matter less seriously than the other nations have done.

Geneva—Condemnation of the use of poison gas and prohibition of its exportation for war purposes is proposed in a new article of the draft convention offered by Representative Theodore E. Burton of Ohio, heading the American delegation, at the international conference for the control of traffic in arms.

Mr. Burton said he expressed the desire of the American government and people that some such provision regarding poison gas be adopted. He said the subject had been brought to the attention of President Coolidge and that the President will approve a prohibition of the exportation of poison gas for war purposes.

The article proposed by Mr. Burton declares that the use in war of poisonous gasses and liquids had been justly condemned by public opinion, and that the prohibition of such use has been incorporated in treaties which have been signed by a majority of the civilized powers.

FOOD COUNCIL FOR BRITAIN

Geddes Commission Recommends Action to Control Prices on Meat and Bread.

London — The Royal Food Commission, which for many weeks has been hearing evidence regarding food prices, issued its reports—one majority and two minority.

The majority report, signed with various reservations by Chairman Auckland Geddes and other members of the commission, recommends the establishment of a food council to maintain supervision over the staple food trades.

The commissioners recommend that the food council closely watch developments in connection with the importation of meat from Argentina. They think it may become necessary for the government to intervene, either by acquiring a controlling interest in the British companies operating in Argentina or in some other way, if at any time the supply of chilled and frozen meat from this source should be dominated by an adverse trading combination.

ASKS HAWAII BE FORTIFIED

House Navy Committee Head Would Make Island Strongest Outpost.

Washington — Chairman J. T. Butler of the house naval committee, said he would urge legislation at the next session of congress to make the Hawaiian island "the strongest military outpost in the world."

$3,688,873 Expended for War-Torn Area

Committee for Devastated France Reports.

Washington.—The final report of the activities of the American Committee for Devastated France, Inc., covering the period from its establishment on April 1, 1918, to the formal ending of its work in the war-torn areas of France on March 31, 1924, has just been issued. The report disclosed that the committee received a total of $4,813,749 in cash and supplies and of this sum 76.85 per cent, or $3,688,873, was sent to France, or spent in the United States for the benefit of France.

In making public the report, Rouget D. Jenkins, executive vice president of the committee, said that the principal services developed in France by the committee had been taken over by French committees. This step was in line with the original policy of the organization, which sought to reduce to a minimum the after-waste of war and insure the continued effectiveness of the work. Miss Anne Morgan, chairman of the executive committee of the organization, wrote a foreword to the report.

"The American Committee for Devastated France," she said, "has completed its work. Its records show a total of more than $4,000,000 received and disbursed. The committee regarded itself always as a trustee, responsible to its donors and friends. To them it now presents this summarized statement of its activities. To the thousands who gave so generously of their means, their time and their thought in order that its purposes might be realized, the committee extends its deep gratitude."

Established Forty-Five Canteens.

Even before the organization applied itself to the civilian problems of the war zone it was called upon to aid the military forces. In this work 45 canteens were established, and more than 380,000 American and French soldiers were served, and, in addition, six women doctors and ten nurses went into service in emergency hospitals.

"In retrospect," said the report, "the committee's program appears to have been planned at the outset and carried through to the end. Actually, it was forged on the anvil of demand. The type of service changed constantly with the succeeding needs of the people. The first task was emergency relief—to provide places to sleep, food and clothing, to care for the children, to restore the soil to production. Then came a need for public health measures, hygiene, physical education, agricultural aid, libraries, schools—a service to meet the barest physical and spiritual necessities of a people who were taking up life anew in a region ruined by war."

The report disclosed that the sum of $204,741 was spent for educational and children's work, and that $87,590 was expended in agriculture. For public health and nursing the sum of $11,670 was used, while in the rehabilitation and relief of villages $28,958 was employed. The committee spent $26,279 in the purchase of food from the American army, and $3,000 for church bells. Discussing the chief services which the committee established and maintained, the report said:

"Transportation—In a territory where all normal means of transportation had been destroyed or disrupted the whole service of the committee was dependent on its own transportation system. In order to accomplish this, 63 camions and camionettes and a repair shop were maintained.

"Construction—Obviously there was an immediate need for building and repairs. Sawmill, carpenters' and joiners' shops were established at Blerancourt, and employed an average of 175 workmen; prisoners of war first, and then needy refugees. In addition, repairs to buildings were made and furniture manufactured for schools and libraries. The staff also took on private work at the rate of 300,000 francs a month, the profits going to civilian relief. The business thus established was finally sold to a contracting firm and the money obtained was turned into the promotion of the public health service."

Furnished Farm Implements.

In the way of agricultural aid the committee furnished farm implements, live stock, vegetables and seeds, distributing them below cost. Abandoned farms were worked and syndicate and farmers' co-operatives were organized. Fifty-two tractors were used in showing the farmers of the Aisne more progressive methods, and wheat from 125,000 acres was thrashed at three central points. Under the auspices of the ministers of agriculture and of education demonstrations in American methods of canning fruits and vegetables were carried on for four years in 36 French departments, including more than 100 domestic science and normal schools.

"The infant mortality," said the report, "in the committee's region was reduced to 24 per 1,000, less than 2.5 per cent. The infant mortality in the entire Department of the Aisne was 87 per 1,000, and as a comparative figure the rate for New York city in 1924, which was 6.8 per cent, might be cited."

AERIAL WINDMILL TO HARNESS GALE FOR WORK ON FARM

British Expect to Generate Cheap Electricity.

London.—Having failed to achieve any world-beating records in aerially racing the wind, John Bull is trying to harness the "blawsted" gale.

An "airplane windmill," invented by a Berlin scientist, Major Bilau, is the backbone of the effort. A specimen of this invention and four other types have been erected on the hilly ground near Harpenden, in Hertfordshire, where the Oxford University Institute of Agricultural Engineering has established a testing ground.

Englishmen have been so encouraged by the results of the experiments to date that they already have visions of huge economies and a brighter countryside, through the cheap generation of electricity.

It is believed that a windmill will eventuate capable of operating all of the plant of a large farm or of supplying all the needs of the average village—lighting the streets and houses, and, perhaps, running its "movie" house. After the installation, it is thought, the cost of operation will be almost nil. All the attention required will be the visit of a man with an oil can once a month.

The steel sails of the Bilau aerodynamo are mounted on a stout post some thirty feet high. They give the appearance of a greatly magnified airplane propeller. The sails are so constructed that suction is brought into play to get every possible ounce of turning power from the wind. As the sails revolve they set cogs in motion, which operate a dynamo contained in a balloon-like attachment behind the propeller. The current so generated is carried by wires to the power station.

The testing station officials have found a machine of the older type generates three-quarters of a kilowatt, with the wind blowing at five miles an hour. Under similar conditions, they say, the Bilau machine is apparently capable of registering at least five kilowatts, or roughly the equivalent of a seven horse-power motor.

Dick Turpin Capes Cloak English Women

London. — The highwayman's cape worn by robbers in the time of King George I is coming into fashion this spring for women. Capes generally are in favor, but the style made famous by Dick Turpin, 200 years ago, and other notables in the robbing game have been particularly popular, most of them dipping far past the waistline, many of them scallopwise.

Among the first to follow this vogue was Miss Ava Bodley, well known in society, who was married recently to Robert Wigram, secretary of the British embassy in Paris. Mrs. Wigram's going-away costume included a cape over a long coat, which matched a pale mignonette green dress and green felt hat.

The SANDMAN STORY

SLY MR. FOX

MR. FOX was very much interested in Mr. Kingbird. He wanted to know more about him. "Does Jimmy Crow always fly away when he sees you?" he inquired.

"Unless it happens to be a Mr. Crow who is very inexperienced," replied Mr. Kingbird, lifting his crest at the thought. "Sometimes a Mr. Crow will be foolish enough to think he can scare me, but he soon learns to his sorrow that I am a born fighter. My wings and my tail, he finds out, were made to help me protect my wife and family."

"Well, can you really pick out the drones from the other bees?" asked Mr. Fox.

Jimmy Crow Had Given Warning.

"That is what some books tell about me," replied wise Mr. Kingbird.

"But why do you select the drones? Is it because they haven't a sting?" inquired Mr. Fox.

"Perhaps," answered clever Mr. Kingbird, "but you know, don't you, that while the drones live on honey, they do not take any home. They are not of much use. The workers are the bees that keep things going in the hives."

Mr. Fox had to be satisfied with this answer to his questions, and so he changed the subject. "You said that some books said that you were a tyrant. Are there others that treat you better?"

"Yes, indeed," was the reply. "Some books say that I only give battle when there is just cause and that I am not a bully as others claim that I am.

"Some books print things about the way I bully smaller birds and plague them just for the fun I get out of it. They say I swoop down upon them from a high place and strike them on the head or back of the neck and then dart back like a flash, and that I never make a fair hand-to-hand fight.

"You saw Jimmy Crow, Mr. Fox. Did he try to fight me? No indeed, he just turned and flew away. I had to chase him to make him keep away from my nest, and that is the way it is. You see, I get blamed for things I never do, and am called names I do not deserve.

"But some of the books tell the truth about me and say I do a great deal of good—that while I do eat bees it has been found that most of my diet consists of insects that Mr. Man is glad to get out of the way."

"Well, if you never do anything else," said Mr. Fox, "you can scare Jimmy Crow, and that, in my opinion, is enough to make you a king."

Mr. Kingbird did not answer, for at that moment he spied Jimmy Crow or one of his brothers or cousins coming toward his home tree, and away darted Mr. Kingbird to show he was still on the watch.

The next time Mr. Fox saw Jimmy Crow, he said: "I saw you the other day, Jimmy, but you were in too much of a hurry to see me. You seemed to be going in the same direction that Mr. Kingbird was going, only you were ahead, Jimmy. Did you happen to see him?"

Jimmy Crow cocked his head to one side and gave a loud call. Mr. Fox darted away under the bushes. Jimmy Crow had given the warning that means to all who hear it. "There is a fox about, look out!"

Presently Jimmy stopped his cries. "He is a sly one, he is," said Jimmy to himself, "always seeing things you don't want him to. Now I wonder where he was on that day when I started to call on the Kingbirds. Just going to pay them a little visit, was all I was going to do.

"Well, I can send Mr. Fox running any time. I tell folks he is about." Off flew Jimmy cawing as if he wasn't afraid of a thing in the world; but then he knew that Mr. Kingbird was not anywhere around just then.

The Why of Superstitions

By H. IRVING KING

LADY-BUGS, NEW CLOTHES

IF A lady-bug lights on your hand it means a pair of new gloves, if on your dress a new dress, if on your shoes a new pair of shoes, etc. This, according to the Journal of the American Folk-Lore Society, is a common superstition in Massachusetts and Upper Canada. The genesis of it is easy to discover. The lady-bug was the especial pet and representative of the Norse Goddess Freya, the goddess of fruitfulness and the dispenser of good gifts.

To this day the Scandinavian and North German farmers look for good crops when they see the lady-bugs unusually plentiful, and Teutonic and Norse mythology and folk-lore is full of good words regarding the spotted, little, winged insect whose markings are said to be those of the sun, in which radiant orb, according to one version, Freya had her home. From the attributes assigned to Freya it would appear that her worship was compounded of sun-worship and of the worship of the procreative forces of nature. At any rate she was bounteous in her bestowal of good gifts, and so when one of her bright little representatives alights upon any article of clothing you are wearing, it naturally indicates that the beneficent goddess is going to make you a present of a new garment of the same description.

YOUR HEALTH

By ANDREW F. CURRIER, M. D.

ECZEMA

IT is only since the time of Hebra the great Vienna dermatologist, that this disease of the skin has had a scientific basis; before that, almost any skin disease about which a doctor was uncertain he would label "eczema" or "salt-rheum" or "tetter."

If on the head of a child, it was called "scald head" or "milk crust." Eczema comes in a hundred forms. It is the skin crying out from bad treatment.

It is constitutional or it may come from local irritation of any kind and may be present at any period of life, alike in males and females.

When constitutional, it spells weakness or bad nerves or poor nutrition or some fault in taking up and assimilating the food.

It may also be distinctly an inflammatory disease, lasting a few days or an indefinite period with symptoms which may be mild or severe.

The common symptom is burning or itching, which often is worse at night.

The more one scratches the skin, the worse the eruption becomes. Frequently there is a watery or sticky discharge, and when this dries it may thicken or cake in scales, lumps and crusts.

If this crust is removed the underlying surface will be found fiery red and will bleed freely.

Often there are cracks in the skin which are sore and painful and heal slowly, especially in cold weather.

There may be merely a reddened surface, dry or moist, scaly or crusty with a crop of pimples.

But these pimples may become blisters which coalesce and cover a large area.

If the fluid in these vesicles becomes purulent one may have a sore which may discharge indefinitely.

When on the face and scalp it may be very easily mistaken for erysipelas.

Eczema may occur on any portion of the body, or it may involve every inch of the skin and the treatment of such cases is very difficult.

In treating it the cause must be found and removed if possible, moisture and air must usually be excluded from it and it must be protected by ointments, dusting powders and bandages, but seldom by lotions and watery fluids.

The bowels must be kept open and when the eruption has healed, hot, cold, or carbonic acid baths may be used. Acid fruits, shell-fish, tomatoes and any other food that is irritating must be omitted, also alcohol and tobacco.

Good dusting powders are talc, dry wheat flour, bismuth or zinc. Tar, zinc or lead are often used in ointments for eczema; and tonics, including iron, quinine, strychnia, arsenic, and cod liver oil are frequently of service. Exercise must be regulated and the general condition improved.

Knot in Boundary Line

The northern boundary of Minnesota was settled by the treaty of Ghent terminating the War of 1812. By it the Lake of the Woods was to be the northern boundary. At the time it was supposed that there were many rivers flowing from the lake eastward, and the United States was to have the land drained by them. When the actual survey was made it was found that there were no rivers flowing eastward, and so because of the intention and after many surveys had been made and a commission appointed to settle the matter, the small piece of land called the Northern peninsula was ceded to the United States in 1873 and the question finally settled by the United States and England in 1877.

"What's in a Name?"

By MILDRED MARSHALL

Facts about your name; its history; meaning; whence it was derived; significance; your lucky day, lucky jewel

NINA

THOUGH Nina has a typically French sound, the name is regarded as English. However, it came to us through the French by a lengthy process of evolution. The Hebrew Chanaach was its earliest source and from this word it derived its significance of "grace."

Through the English Hannah, it came to France as Anne and was soon given the diminutive, Annette. As Nanette, it appeared simultaneously, but the French love of variety changed the latter form to Nanon and finally Ninon.

The beauty and fame of Ninon de l'Enclos, superwoman and court "vamp" in the reign of Louis XIV, spread her name afar. It became almost a synonym for charmer and the maids of several countries coveted it. But Ninon is too Gallic for English ears so, in its transportation across the channel the ending underwent a change and Nina was the final result. It has enjoyed extraordinary vogue in this country.

The diamond is Nina's talismanic gem. It is the emblem of fearlessness and invincibility and promises its wearer success in all undertakings and freedom from misgivings. According to an old superstition, it enhances the love of a husband for his wife. Sunday is Nina's lucky day and 3 her lucky number.

Let's Get a 92-Scoring Butter!
It is very important to deliver your cream twice a week in order to get a 92-scoring butter.
All our butter is scored and inspected by the Government Inspector and whatever score he places on our butter is the basis on which the Creameries Ass'n makes payment. Cream a week old will never make butter scoring 92 even tho it is sweet. Our biggest trouble is with old flavor which shows up in butter a week or so after it is made.
It is very encouraging the way our patrons have realized the necessity of delivering their cream twice a week yet some seem to think that as long as their cream is sweet it will make the highest grade butter.
Co-operate with us and you will get more money for your butterfat. In this way only we will get a 92-scoring butter.

Mrs. Saunders Tells how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Relieved Troubles of Change of Life

Knoxville, Tenn.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound while going through the Change of Life. I was very nervous, could not sleep and had melancholy spells. In fact, I was nearly insane at times and my memory was almost a blank. I was so weak I could not do my housework half of the time and suffered dreadfully with my back. My doctor said I would have to worry it out and I went through this for three years before I began taking the Vegetable Compound which I saw advertised. I think it was eight bottles that I took. It has been two years since I took any and I haven't had a doctor since for that trouble, I do all my washing and ironing and I have gained from 116 to 138 pounds. I feel so well I think I do not need any medicine now, but I advise all women who suffer physically and mentally as I did to give the Vegetable Compound a fair trial. I hope it will do as much for them as it did for me."—Mrs. T. A. SAUNDERS, 711 E. Depot Street, Knoxville, Tenn.

She told him all this ingenuously, simply. Dirk felt drawn toward her, sorry for her. His was a nature quick to sympathy.

He told his mother about her. Selina was deeply interested and stirred. "Do you think she'd spend some Saturday and Sunday here with us on the farm? She could come with you on Friday and go back Sunday night if she wanted to. Or stay until Monday morning and go back with you. There's the spare room, all quiet and cool. She could do as she liked."

Mattie came one Friday night. It was the end of October, and Indian summer, the most beautiful time of the year on the Illinois prairie. About the countryside for miles was the look of bounteousness, of plenty, of prophecy fulfilled as when a beautiful and fertile woman having borne her children and found them good, now sits serene-eyed, gracious, ample bosomed, satisfied.

Into the face of Mattie Schwengauer there came a certain glory. When she and Selina clasped hands Selina stared at her rather curiously, as though startled. Afterward she said to Dirk, aside: "But I thought you said she was ugly!"

"Well, she is, or—well, isn't she?"

"Look at her!"

Mattie Schwengauer was talking to Meena Bras, the houseworker. She was standing with her hands on her ample hips, her fine head thrown back, her eyes alight, her lips smiling so that you saw her strong square teeth. Something had amused Mattie. She laughed. It was the laugh of a young girl, care-free, relaxed, at ease.

For two days Mattie did as she pleased, which meant she helped pull vegetables in the garden, milk the cows, saddle the horses; rode them without a saddle in the pasture.

"It got so I hated to do all those things on the farm," she said, laughing a little shamefacedly. "I guess it was because I had to. But now it comes back to me and I enjoy it because it's natural to me, I suppose. Anyway, I'm having a grand time, Mrs. DeJong. The grandest time I ever had in my life." Her face was radiant and almost beautiful.

"If you want me to believe that," said Selina, "you'll come again."

But Mattie Schwengauer never did come again.

Early the next week one of the university students approached Dirk. He was a Junior, very influential in his class, and a member of the fraternity to which Dirk was practically pledged. A decidedly desirable frat.

"Say, look here, DeJong, I want to talk to you a minute. Uh, you've got to cut out that girl—Swinegour or whatever her name is—or it's all off with the fellows in the frat."

"What d'you mean! Cut out! What's the matter with her?"

"Matter! She's Unclassified, isn't she! And do you know what the story is? She told it herself as an economy hint to a girl who was working her way through. She bathes with her union suit and white stockings on to save laundry soap. Scrubs 'em on her! 'S the God's truth."

Into Dirk's mind there flashed a picture of this large girl in her tight knitted union suit and her white stockings sitting in a tub half full of water and scrubbing them and herself simultaneously. A comic picture, and a revolting one. Pathetic, too, but he would not admit that.

"Imagine!" the frat brother-to-be was saying. "Well, we can't have a fellow who goes around with a girl like that. You got to cut her out, see! Completely. The fellahs won't stand for it."

Dirk had a mental picture of himself striking a noble attitude and saying, "Won't stand for it, huh! She's worth more than the whole caboodle of you put together. And you can all go to h—l!"

Instead he said, vaguely, "Oh. Well. Uh—"

Dirk changed his seat in the classroom, avoided Mattie's eyes, shot out of the door the minute class was over. One day he saw her coming toward him on the campus and he sensed that she intended to stop and speak to him—chide him laughingly, perhaps. He quickened his pace, swerved a little to one side, and as he passed lifted his cap and nodded, keeping his eyes straight ahead. Out of the tail of his eye he could see her standing a moment irresolutely in the path.

He got into the fraternity. The fellahs liked him from the first. Selina said once or twice, "Why don't you bring that nice Mattie home with you again some time soon? Such a nice girl—woman, rather. A fine mind, too. She'll make something of herself. You'll see. Bring her next week, h'm?"

Dirk shuffled, coughed, looked away. "Oh, I dunno. Haven't seen her lately. Guess she's busy with another crowd, or something."

He tried not to think of what he had done, for he was honestly ashamed. Terribly ashamed. So he said to himself, "Oh, what of it!" and hid his shame.

A month later Selina again said, "I wish you'd invite Mattie for Thanksgiving dinner. Unless she's going home, which I doubt. We'll have turkey and pumpkin pie and all the rest of it. She'll love it."

"Mattie?" He had actually forgotten her name.

"Yes, of course. Isn't that right? Mattie Schwengauer?"

"Oh, her. Uh—well—I haven't been seeing her lately."

"Oh, Dirk, you haven't quarreled with that nice girl!"

He decided to have it out. "Listen, mother. There are a lot of different crowds at the U, see? And Mattie doesn't belong to any of 'em. You wouldn't understand, but it's like this. She—she's smart and jolly and everything, but she just doesn't belong. Being friends with a girl like that doesn't get you anywhere. Besides, she isn't a girl. She's a middle-aged woman, when you come to think of it."

"Doesn't get you anywhere!" Selina's tone was cool and even. Then, as the boy's gaze did not meet hers: "Why, Dirk DeJong, Mattie Schwengauer is one of my reasons for sending you to a university. She's what I call part of a university education. Just talking to her is learning something valuable. I don't mean that you wouldn't naturally prefer pretty young girls of your own age to go around with, and all. It would be queer if you didn't. But this Mattie—why, she's life. Do you remember that story of when she washed dishes in the kosher restaurant over on Twelfth street and the proprietor used to rent out dishes and cutlery for Irish and Italian neighborhood weddings where they had pork and goodness knows what all, and then use them next day in the restaurant, again for the kosher customers?"

Selina wrote Mattie, inviting her to the farm for Thanksgiving, and Mattie answered gratefully, declining. "I shall always remember you," she wrote in that letter, "with love."

Chapter XI

Throughout Dirk's Freshman year there were, for him, no heartening, informal, mellow talks before the wood-fire in the book-lined study of some professor whose wisdom was such a mixture of classic lore and modernism as to be an inspiration to his listeners. Midwest professors delivered their lectures in the classroom as they had been delivering them in the past ten or twenty years and as they would deliver them until death or a trustees' meeting should remove them. The younger professors and instructors in natty gray suits and brightly colored ties made a point of being unpedantic in the classroom and rather overdid it. They posed as being one of the fellows; would dashingly use a bit of slang to create a laugh from the boys and an adoring titter from the girls. Dirk somehow preferred the pedants to these. When these had to give an informal talk to the men before some university event they would start by saying, "Now listen, fellahs—" At the dances they were not above "rushing" the pretty coeds.

Two of Dirk's classes were conducted by women professors. They were well on toward middle age, or past it; desiccated women. Only their eyes were alive. Their clothes were of some indefinite dark stuff, brown or drab-gray; their hair lifeless; their hands long, bony, unvital. They had seen classes and classes and classes. A roomful of fresh young faces that appeared briefly only to be replaced by another roomful of fresh young faces like round white pencil marks manipulated momentarily on a slate, only to be sponged off to give way to other round white marks. Of the two women one—the elder—was occasionally likely to flare into sudden life; a flame in the ashes of a burned-out grate. She had humor and a certain caustic wit, qualities that had managed miraculously to survive even the deadly and numbing effects of thirty years in the classroom. A fine mind, and inoclastic, hampered by the restrictions of a conventional community and the soul of a congenital spinster.

Under the guidance of these Dirk chafed and grew restless. Miss Euphemia Hollingswood had a way of emphasizing every third or fifth syllable, bringing her voice down hard on it.

He found himself waiting for that emphasis and shrinking from it as from a sledge-hammer blow. It hurt his head.

Miss Lodge droned. She approached a word with a maddening uh-uh-uh-uh. In the uh-uh-uh-uh face of the uh-uh-uh-uh geometrical situation of the uh-uh-uh-uh—

He shifted restlessly in his chair, found his hands clenched into fists, and took refuge in watching the shadow cast by an oak branch outside the window on a patch of sunlight against the blackboard behind her.

During the early spring Dirk and Selina talked things over again, seated before their own fireplace in the High Prairie farmhouse. Selina had had that fireplace built five years before and her love of it amounted to worship. She had it lighted always on winter evenings and in the spring when the nights were sharp. In Dirk's absence she would sit before it at night long after the rest of the weary household had gone to bed. High Prairie never knew how many guests Selina entertained there before her fire those winter evenings—old friends and new. Sobig was there, the plump earth-grimed baby who rolled and tumbled in the fields while his young mother wiped the sweat from her face to look at him with fond eyes. Dirk DeJong of ten years hence was there. Simeon Peake, dapper, soft-spoken, ironic, in his shiny boots and his hat always a little on one side. Pervus DeJong, a blue-shirted giant with strong tender hands and little fine golden hairs on the backs of them. In strange contrast to these was the patient, tireless figure of Maartje Pool standing in the doorway of Roelf's little shed, her arms tucked in her apron for warmth. "You make fun, huh?" she said, wistfully, "you and Roelf. You make fun." And Roelf, the dark vivid boy, misunderstood. Roelf, the genius. He was always one of the company.

She and Dirk sat there one fine sharp evening in early April. It was Saturday. Of late Dirk had not always come to the farm for the week-end. Eugene and Paula Arnold had been home for the Easter holidays. Julie Arnold had invited Dirk to the gay parties at the Prairie avenue house. He had even spent two entire week-ends there. After the brocaded luxury of the Prairie avenue house his farm bedroom seemed almost startlingly stark and bare.

Selina frankly enjoyed Dirk's somewhat fragmentary accounts of these visits; extracted from them as much vicarious pleasure as he had had in the reality—more, probably.

"Now, tell me what you had to eat," she would say, sociably, like a child. "What did you have for dinner, for example? Was it grand? Julie tells me they have a butler now. Well! I can't wait till I hear Aug Hempel on the subject."

He would tell her of the grandeurs of the Arnold menage. She would interrupt and exclaim: "Mayonnaise! On fruit! Oh, I don't believe I'd like that. You did! Well, I'll have it for you next week when you come home. I'll get the recipe from Julie."

He didn't think he'd be home next week. One of the fellows he'd met at the Arnolds' had invited him to their place out north, on the lake. He had a boat.

"That'll be lovely!" Selina exclaimed, after an almost unnoticeable moment of silence—silence with panic in it. "I'll try not to fuss and be worried like an old hen every minute of the time I think you're on the water. . . . Now, do go on, Sobig. First fruit with mayonnaise, h'm? What kind of soup?"

He was not a naturally talkative person. There was nothing surly about his silence. It was a taciturn streak inherited from his Dutch ancestry. This time, though, he was more voluble than usual. "Paula . . ." came again and again into his conversation. "Paula . . . Paula . . ." and again ". . . Paula." He did not seem conscious of the repetition, but Selina's quick ear caught it.

"I haven't seen her," Selina said, "since she went away to school the first year. She must be—let's see—she's a year older than you are. She's nineteen going on twenty. Last time I saw her I thought she was a dark scrawny little thing. Too bad she didn't inherit Julie's lovely gold coloring and good looks, instead of Eugene, who doesn't need 'em."

"She isn't!" said Dirk, hotly. "She's dark and slim and sort of—uh—sensuous"—Selina started visibly, and raised her hand quickly to her mouth to hide a smile—"like Cleopatra. Her eyes are big and kind of slanting—not squinty I don't mean, but slanting up a little at the corners. Cut out, kind of, so that they look bigger than most people's."

"My eyes used to be considered rather fine," said Selina, mischievously; but he did not hear.

"She makes all the other girls look sort of blowzy." He was silent a moment. Selina was silent, too, and it was not a happy silence. Dirk spoke again, suddenly, as though continuing aloud a train of thought, "—all but her hands."

He pondered a moment, his brows knitted. At last, slowly, "Well, I don't know. They're brown, and awfully thin and sort of—grabby. I mean it makes me nervous to watch them. And when the rest of her is cool they're hot when you touch them."

He looked at his mother's hands that were busy with some sewing. The stuff on which she was working was a bit of satin ribbon; part of a hood intended to grace the head of Geertje Pool Vander Sijde's second baby. She had difficulty in keeping her rough fingers from catching on the soft surface of the satin. Manual work, water, sun, and wind had tanned those hands, hardened them, enlarged the knuckles, spread them, roughened them. Yet how sure they were, and strong, and cool and reliable—and tender. Suddenly, looking at them, Dirk said, "Now your hands. I love your hands, Mother."

She put down her work hastily, yet quietly, so that the sudden rush of happy grateful tears in her eyes should not sully the pink satin ribbon. She was flushed, like a girl. "Do you, Sobig?" she said.

After a moment she took up her sewing again. Her face looked young, eager, fresh, like the face of the girl who had found cabbages so beautiful that night when she bounced along the rutty Halsted road with Klaas Pool, many years ago. It came into her face, that look, when she was happy, exhilarated, excited. That was why those who loved her and brought that look into her face thought her beautiful, while those who did not love her never saw the look and consequently considered her a plain woman.

There was another silence between the two. Then: "Mother, what would you think of my going east next fall, to take a course in architecture?"

"Would you like that, Dirk?"

"Yes, I think so—yes."

"Then I'd like it better than anything in the world. I—it makes me happy just to think of it."

"It would—cost an awful lot."

"I'll manage. I'll manage. . . What made you decide on architecture?"

"I don't know, exactly. The new buildings at the university—Gothic, you know—are such a contrast to the old. Then Paula and I were talking the other day. She hates their house on Prairie—terrible old lumpy gray stone pile, with the black of the I. C. trains all over it. She wants her father to build north—an Italian villa or French chateau. Something of that sort. So many of her friends are moving to the North shore, away from these hideous South-side and North-side Chicago houses with their stoops, and their bay windows, and their terrible turrets. Ugh!"

"Well, now, do you know," Selina remonstrated mildly, "I like 'em. I suppose I'm wrong, but to me they seem sort of natural and solid and unpretentious, like the clothes that old August Hempel wears, so squarecut and baggy. Those houses look dignified to me, and fitting. They may be ugly—probably are—but, anyway, they're not ridiculous. They have a certain rugged grandeur. They're Chicago. Those French and Italian gimcracky things they—they're incongruous. It's as if Abraham Lincoln were to appear suddenly in pink satin knee breeches and buckled shoes, and lace ruffles at his wrists."

Dirk could laugh at that picture. But he protested, too. "But there's no native architecture, so what's to be done! You wouldn't call those smoke-blackened old stone and brick piles with their iron fences and their conservatories and cupolas and gingerbread exactly native, would you?"

Arabian Dancing Girls

"The Arabian dancing girls," a traveler explains, "are born to their profession. Many of them had dancing mothers. Others are dedicated to the profession by their mothers when they are but babies. While there are no dancing schools, these children practice continually, imitating from earliest childhood the steps and movements of the dancers, until they are highly skilled in it themselves.

"Unlike the other Arab women, these dancing girls appear with their faces uncovered. They wear heavy and voluminous skirts, like old-fashioned European dresses. They are frequently very plain, decorated only by the bangles and chains. While the girls are no more beautiful than other girls, they have exceeding charm, which makes them very delightful."

Greeks and Paint

The Greeks recognized the value of paint as a preservative and made use of something akin to it on their ships. Pliny writes of the mode of boiling wax and painting ships with it, after which, he continues, "neither the sea, nor the wind, nor the sun can destroy the wood thus protected."

The Romans, being essentially a warlike people, never sought the decoration of buildings to the high point it had reached with the Greeks. For all that the ruins of Pompeii show many structures whose mural decorations are in fair shape today. The colors used were glaring; a black background was the usual one, and the combinations worked thereon were red, yellow and blue.

The law is to be made retroactive for Frau Ebert, widow of the late Friedrich Ebert, who would receive 1,144 marks monthly under its provisions instead of only 510 marks, as at present.

Berlin—The 43d birthday of former Crown Prince Frederick William inspired the utraconservative Kreuz Zeitung to a visionary panegyric. The newspaper admits an emporer no longer exists in the country, but it consoles the onetime crown prince that Germany now has a president who at least is no longer identical with the representatives of the revolution of 1918, but a leader who is a product of Prusso-German history.

London—An official statement regarding the recent anti-Balfour riots in Damascus was made in parliament by Colonel Amery, Colonial secretary. "The demonstrations against Lord Balfour were expected beforehand," he said, "but they were expected to take place in Beirut not in Damascus. The French Government took the necessary precautions to prevent outbreaks in Beirut, and the riots in Damascus was a complete surprise both to the French administration in Syria, and to the British administration in Palestine."

Cape Town, South Africa—The private dinner given the Prince of Wales was the occasion for a demonstration of enthusiastic loyalty. Many nationalist members of parliament said the prince's visit had brought a new era to South Africa. Wales delivered part of his speech in the native vernacula.

Honolulu—The most picturesque greetings extended to the officers, men and guests of the United States grand fleet thus far on its cruise was tendered by the Japanese community of Oahu. The welcome was in the form of a lantern parade in which hundreds of persons marched.

THE KITCHEN CABINET

In great matters men show themselves as they wish to be seen; in small matters, as they are.

SUMMERY FOODS

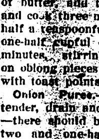
Jellied Veal and Ham.—Take a shank of veal that has not been trimmed, wash and place in a kettle, pouring over it a pint of boiling water for each pound of shank. Add one-fourth cupful each of chopped carrots, minced onion and diced celery, a few sprigs of parsley, a bay leaf, eight peppercorns, one-eighth teaspoonful of thyme and two teaspoonfuls of salt. Cook slowly until the meat falls from the bones, cool under weight, then it may be cut into slices. Strain the liquor through a fine sieve, cool, and remove all of the fat. Clarify the stock, using two eggs and crushed shells for each pint of stock, boil ten minutes, strain through a cheesecloth, add one-half teaspoonful of salt and a few grains of cayenne. Into a cold, wet mold or bread pan, pour a little of this clarified veal broth and allow it to stiffen. On this lay thin slices of the veal and very thinly sliced cooked ham. Cover with broth, cool until stiff, repeat until all the broth is used. Chill for several hours and turn from the mold. If the weather is very hot and there seems to be danger of the broth not stiffening add two tablespoonfuls of gelatin which has been softened in cold water.

Stuffed Celery.—Mix chopped nuts with cream cheese and fill the hollows of tender celery stalks, adding a bit of mayonnaise to moisten the cream cheese. If filled carefully the stalks may be eaten from the fingers as one does plain celery.

When currants are plentiful can some fresh with sugar for winter. They are delicious. Crush every currant, using a potato masher; use an equal measure of sugar, stir and let stand until the sugar has been dissolved, then put into chilled sterilized jars and seal. Keep in a cool place; on a cellar floor or in the back part of the ice chest a row of small cans will be out of the way. Strawberries, raspberries, blackberries and all such soft fruits may be canned in this way and used as fresh fruit in winter for shortcakes.

Food for the Family.

There are so many ways of serving potatoes that we should endeavor to vary the method from day to day.



O'Brien Potatoes.—Fry three cupfuls of cubed potatoes in deep fat, drain and sprinkle with salt. Cook one slice of onion in one-half tablespoonful of butter three minutes, remove the onion, add three canned pimentoes finely minced. When well-heated, add the potatoes; stir until well-mixed, turn into a serving dish and sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Creamed Mushrooms on Toast.—The first warm days bring up the field mushroom which are so delicious and may be served in so many ways. Clean one pound of mushrooms, remove the caps and cut both caps and stems into thin slices. Melt five tablespoonfuls of butter, add the sliced mushrooms and cook three minutes. Sprinkle with half a teaspoonful of flour; pour over one-half cupful of cream. Cook five minutes, stirring constantly. Serve on oblong pieces of toast and garnish with toast points and parsley.

Onion Puree.—Cook onions until tender, drain and put through a sieve—there should be two cupfuls. Melt two and one-half tablespoonfuls of butter, add two tablespoonfuls of flour, stir until well blended, then pour on one-half cupful of milk. Bring to the boiling point, add the onion puree, a well-beaten egg and season with salt and cayenne.

Bread and Butter Pudding.—Spread slices of bread generously with butter and arrange in a baking dish, butter side down. Beat three eggs slightly, add one-half cupful of sugar, one-fourth teaspoonful of salt and one quart of milk, pour over the bread and let stand thirty minutes. Bake one hour in a slow oven, covering the first half of the baking. Serve with hard sauce. Cream one-half cupful of sugar with one-quarter cupful of butter slightly softened and flavor with nutmeg.

Maple Cream Layer Cake.—Cream one cupful of butter, add one and one-half cupfuls of powdered sugar, and then add gradually one-half cupful of milk with one cupful each of flour and cornstarch sifted with two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Beat well, add ten drops of bitter almond, two tablespoonfuls of orange flower water, then the stiffly beaten whites of six eggs, folding in lightly. For the filling put one and one-half cupfuls of shaved maple sugar in a saucepan, add a teaspoonful of butter and one-half cupful of thin cream; boil slowly until it spins a thread. Take off, add one teaspoonful of vanilla and beat until thick, then spread on the layers.

Luxuries and Luxuries

Bulgaria has a special law to prevent the import of "luxury" goods. Under the heading of "luxury" come such things as perfumes, wines and expensive silks. But that is not all. Recently an American lady wishing to make a tour in the provinces, and having been warned that hotel rooms were not always of the cleanest, went to a chemist and asked for a bottle of insect powder. Judge of her astonishment when the salesman replied, "I am sorry, madam, but that is a luxury!"

Uncertain Feeling

Dorothy, who had just returned from Europe, was asked by her teacher how she enjoyed her trip and whether or not she was seasick.

"The trip was very interesting, but I was so sick all the way over that one minute I was afraid I would die and the next minute I was afraid I wouldn't," replied Dorothy.

Forty-two per cent of the farmers in the United States blame their financial difficulties on the low prices of farm products, according to the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation, which has completed a study of the primary factors affecting the financial difficulties of the farmer based on a survey made by the United States Department of Agriculture. Seventeen per cent of the farmers feel that high taxes are the direct cause of the farm depression, eleven per cent blame the high costs for farm labor, ten per cent feel that high freight rates are responsible, ten per cent blame the high interest, six per cent credit the depression to reckless expenditures during boom period, and four per cent think it was too much credit.

An inquiry made by the Department of Agriculture through both bankers and farmers shows that on an average 5 per cent of the farm owners in 15 corn and wheat-producing states lost their farms through foreclosure or bankruptcy during the late depression. Four and a half per cent more had turned over their farms to creditors without legal process, making a total of about 9.5 per cent who had lost their farms with or without legal proceedings. An additional 15 per cent were really bankrupt, but were holding on through the leniency of their creditors. By groups of states the percentage of owner-farmers who lost their farms since 1920 were as follows: Five East North Central states, nearly 6 per cent; seven North Central states, over 9 per cent; and for the three Mountain states nearly 20 per cent. The percentage of tenants who lost their property ran materially higher.

Records of the Department of Justice indicate that in the pre-war years 5 per cent of all the bankruptcy cases were farmers. During the deflation 14 per cent of all bankruptcy cases were farmers. In some of these states where in pre-war years the farmer bankruptcy cases represented about 7 per cent of all such cases, this percentage in 1922 had risen to nearly 30 per cent.

These losses have not been due to inefficiency on the part of the farmers, points out the Agricultural Foundation, as practically all of them were incurred by men who had been doing fairly well until they entered the period of drastic deflation.

Let's Get a 92-Scoring Butter!

It is very important to deliver your cream twice a week in order to get a 92-scoring butter.

All our butter is scored and inspected by the Government inspector and whatever score he places on our butter is the basis on which the Creameries Ass'n makes payment. Cream a week old will never make butter scoring 92 even tho it is sweet. Our biggest trouble is with old flavor which shows up in butter a week or so after it is made.

It is very encouraging the way our patrons have realized the necessity of delivering their cream twice a week yet some seem to think that as long as their cream is sweet it will make the highest grade butter.

Co-operate with us and you will get more money for your butterfat. In this way only we will get a 92-scoring butter.

Program In Church A Success

The program given in the church basement by the Dorcas Society last Sunday night was a success from every view point. A record-breaking crowd attended it and each piece of the program was given very well. Mrs. Sven Johnson and Mrs. Paul Olson demonstrated carding and spinning wool, while Norwegian songs were being sung by a group of small girls. Rev. Aakre of Goodridge and Rev. S. L. Tallackson of Thief River Falls gave short talks, appropriate to the occasion, the former in Norwegian and the latter in English. Rev. and Mrs. Stormo of Roseau furnished music and solos.

A table whereon a great variety of old Norwegian articles was displayed, was the chief attraction of the evening. Norwegian flags were sold, and "fuel for the inner man" was served by the Dorcas Society.

Canadian Shipbuilding

As early as 1723 shipbuilding was a branch of industry in Canada of the French regime. During that year six merchant ships and two men-of-war were built in the colony. In 1752 a 74-gun ship was built at Cape Diamond, Quebec city. In 1810, fifty years after the surrender of Canada by Governor Vaudreuil to General Amherst, 26 vessels were built in Canada having a total tonnage of 5,836 tons. These statistics show that they must have been small vessels.

Bird Migration

In certain parts of the ocean are to be found "bad atmospheric belts" in which atmospherics of great intensity are experienced at all times of the year, and it has been noted that these belts nearly always coincide with a route of bird migration. It is an interesting problem as to how far the birds in their passage are able to sense these magnetic disturbances.

Barnum of Finance

"A fool is born every minute, but the death rate isn't what it should be," says an exchange. This wasn't exactly the view of the old financier. "They tell me," he remarked, "that every minute a fool is born into the world. And," he added piously, "thank heaven some of them live."—Boston Transcript.

Parasites on Germs

Parasites that live on bacteria of pneumonia, typhoid fever, diphtheria, anthrax, chicken cholera and other disease germs have been discovered and are made into serums to kill all bacteria that prey on man or beast, except the germ of tuberculosis.

Can't Depend on Uncle. The youth who depends upon his thrift and industry, instead of upon some rich uncle who is likely to be vamped in his old age, is the boy who will get an early start toward success.

WHEN SIGNALS ARE SET AGAINST

Danger Signs Given by Bankers—People With Money to Invest Warned Against Ways to Lose It—The Lure of "Easy Money."

If you were an engineer on a railroad you would not intentionally pass safety signals set against you. To the experienced investor there are similar signals for safeguarding his investments. Some of these signs of danger, issued by the Public Service Committee of the State Bank Division, American Bankers Association, in conjunction with the Better Business Bureau, are briefly indicated here.

Big Returns—It is easy to promise an abnormally high rate of dividends, or large market profits, to prospective investors. Heavy risks usually accompany such lures. They are too often the chief talking points of financial charlatans.

Prominent Names — Promoters know that the names and endorsements of successful men carry weight. They are often used without authorization. The prudent investor will look beyond names and will investigate.

The "Ground Floor"—An opportunity to "get in on the ground floor" often turns out to be the same sort of opportunity which the proverbial spider extended to the fly.

Inside Information—"Inside tips" are usually expensive pieces of misinformation. When used as "confidential information" to influence the small investor they are generally of spurious character.

The Fictitious Advance—Professional promoters often arbitrarily advance the prices of the shares they sell as their campaigns gain headway to create buying excitement and induce new buyers to get in before the next rise. Such price advances are artificial, usually employed merely to "speed up" the unloading of shares.

The Telephone Canvass—Irresponsible vendors find it easy to work over the telephone to victimize incautious investors. The cautious investor will not enter into securities transactions by telephone unless he personally knows with whom he is dealing.

The Unselfish Promoter—The promoter who "gives his services" in organizing a company or as an officer of it and advertises that he does so, will bear watching.

The Irresponsible Guarantee—Irresponsible sellers of securities often "guarantee" certain profits, or even that they will buy back shares when the purchaser wants his money. Promises of this nature are made to create confidence and to lull suspicion. They should indicate to the prospective purchaser a special need to investigate.

"Reorganization" and Merger—Unsuccessful companies forced into "reorganization" often call upon stockholders for new funds. Response to such appeals often means merely throwing good money after bad. A conspicuously fraudulent device has been the "merger," by which a new company trading upon fresh prospects and promises, takes over the assets of an unsuccessful venture and issues new stock for old, provided the shareholder pays 25 per cent or so in cash.

The Partial-Payment Plan—This helpful method of selling securities has been much abused. People who prefer to buy securities out of their weekly or monthly earnings, are sometimes victimized by vendors of stocks which have little or no value. All honest securities dealers unite in warning the investor to buy on the partial-payment plan only after making sure of the financial responsibility and standing of the firm with which he does business.

The Appeal to Prejudice—A chief stock in trade of the unreliable promoter is misinformation which plays upon the prejudices and emotions of prospects. This style of promoter points out supposed "evils" and "special privileges" existing in the world of "high finance." He may urge that his venture is a poor man's proposition, free from the "large underwriting profits which the big fellows get." Usually such sellers endeavor to throw suspicion on others to divert it from themselves.

False Sense of Security—"Real estate—the safest security on earth," is the type of slogan under which at times unscrupulous operators endeavor to unload property on persons who want to make an investment, but not a poor speculation. Experienced opinion, supported by impartially-gathered facts, forms the only basis upon which to buy real estate, especially when you cannot see it before you buy.

Mining Fallacies — Many mining ventures are honest but fail because the promoters are unable to finance the proposition through to a successful conclusion. Many other mining promotions are not good prospects although they may be represented as such. If a small investor wishes to buy mining stocks he can do so by purchasing securities of established mining companies with records of substantial earnings and of dividends regularly paid to stockholders.

Oil Risks—To almost every one come opportunities to speculate in oil schemes. Very often such offerings are misrepresented. Usually they are sheer speculations, all the risks being taken with the stockholders' money, while the promoters pay themselves handsomely through stock sales, commissions, salaries or "organization expenses." The investor who desires to buy mining or oil securities should get facts and experienced opinion as to issues of established, successful oil companies. Even the legitimate mining or oil business is speculative and depends for profits upon a sound combination of properties, organization, finances and management.

Invention Delusions—The general public too often believes that large profits are to be gained through patented processes or devices. Inventions are a fascinating means for separating inexperienced investors from their savings. Even when practical from a marketing and manufacturing standpoint, patents are usually only moderately valuable. The small investor cannot afford to take an "Invention Chance" with his funds.

Timber in Mines. The consumption of timber in the mines of the United States has practically doubled within the last twenty years.

Freight Cars by Millions. Rolling stock of all the railroads of the United States consists of 2,348,000 freight cars, 65,000 locomotives and 53,000 passenger cars.

S. P. D. The initials S. P. D. are used as an abbreviation for the Latin phrase salutem plurimam dicit which means "He wishes much health," or "sends his best respects."

Women Bankers. It is interesting to note that women are recognized more frequently in the banking business throughout the West than in the East.

Farewell Party- - -

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Axel Nelson was the scene of much merriment Saturday evening when a group of women tendered Mrs. Nelson a farewell surprise. the evening was spent in conversation and games, and at eleven o'clock a delicious lunch, brot by the self-invited guests, was served. Mrs. Nelson was presented with a sum of money as a token of esteem. Mr. and Mrs. Nelson are leaving for Hanna, N. Dak., where Mr. Nelson has a blacksmith shop. We are sorry to see these good people leave our community but wish them much joy and unbounded success in their new home.—Contributed.

"No," Selina admitted, "but those Italian villas and French chateaux in north Chicago suburbs are a good deal like a lace evening gown in the Arizona desert. It wouldn't keep you cool in the daytime, and it wouldn't be warm enough at night. I suppose a native architecture is evolved from building for the local climate and the needs of the community, keeping beauty in mind as you go. We don't need turrets and towers any more than we need draw-bridges and moats. It's all right to keep them, I suppose, where they grew up, in a country where the feudal system meant that any day your next-door neighbor might take it into his head to call his gang around him and sneak up to steal your wife and tapestries and gold drinking cups."

Dirk was interested and amused. Talks with his mother were likely to affect him thus. "What's your idea of a real Chicago house, mother?"

Selina answered quickly, as if she had thought often about it; as if she would have liked just such a dwelling on the site of the old DeJong farmhouse in which they now were seated so comfortably. "Well, it would need big porches for the hot days and nights so's to catch the prevailing southwest winds from the prairies in the summer—a porch that would be swung clear around to the east, too—or a terrace or another porch east so that if the precious old lake breeze should come up just when you think you're dying of the heat, as it sometimes does, you could catch that, too. It ought to be, built—the house, I mean—rather squarish and tight and solid against our cold winters and northeasters. Then sleeping porches, of course. There's a grand American institution for you! England may have its afternoon tea on the terrace, and Spain may have its patio, and France its courtyard, and Italy its pergola, vine-covered; but America's got the sleeping porch—the screened-in open-air sleeping porch, and I shouldn't wonder if the man who first thought of that would get precedence, on Judgment day, over the men who invented the airplane, the talking machine, and the telephone. After all, he had nothing in mind but the health of the human race." After which grand period Selina grinned at Dirk, and Dirk grinned at Selina and the two giggled together there by the fireplace, companionably.

Selina waved such carping criticism away with a careless hand. "Oh, well, any house that has enough porches, and two or three bathrooms and at least eight closets can be lived in comfortably, no matter what else it has or hasn't got."

Next day they were more serious. The eastern college and the architectural career seemed to be settled things. Selina was content, happy. Dirk was troubled about the expense. He spoke of it at breakfast next morning (Dirk's breakfast; his mother had had hers hours before and now as he drank his coffee, was sitting with him a moment and glancing at the paper that had come in the rural mail delivery). She had been out in the fields overseeing the transplanting of young tomato seedlings from hotbed to field. She wore an old gray sweater buttoned up tight, for the air was still sharp. On her head was a battered black felt soft hat (an old one of Dirk's) much like the one she had worn to the Haymarket that day ten years ago.

"I've been thinking," he began, "the expense—"

"Pigs'll do it," Selina said, calmly. "I've been wanting to put them in for three or four years. It's August Hempel's idea. Hogs, I should have said."

He echoed, "Hogs!" rather faintly.

"High-bred hogs. They're worth their weight in silver this minute, and will be for years to come. I won't go in for them extensively. Just enough to make an architect out of Mr. Dirk DeJong." Then, at the expression in his face: "Don't look so pained, son. There's nothing revolting about a hog—he's a handsome, impressive-looking animal, the hog, when he isn't treated like one."

He looked dejected. "I'd rather not go to school on—hogs."

She took off the felt hat and tossed it over to the old couch by the window; smoothed her hair back with the flat of her palm. You saw that the soft dark hair was liberally sprinkled with gray now, but the eyes were bright and clear as ever.

"You know, Sobig, this is what they call a paying farm—as vegetable farms go. We're out of debt, the land's in good shape, the crop promises well if we don't have another rainy cold spring like last year's. I'm having a grand time. When I see the asparagus plantation actually yielding, that I planted ten years ago, I'm as happy as if I'd stumbled on a gold mine. I think, sometimes, of the way your father objected to my planting the first one. April, like this, in the country, with everything coming up green and new in the rich black loam—I can't tell you. And when I know that it goes to market as food—the best kind of food, that keeps people's bodies clean and clear and flexible and strong! I like to think of babies' mothers saying: 'Now eat your spinach, every scrap, or you can't have any dessert! . . . Carrots make your eyes bright. . . . Finish your potato. Potatoes make you strong!'"

Selina laughed, flushed a little.

"Yes, but how about hogs? Do you feel that way about hogs?"

"Certainly," said Selina, briskly. She pushed toward him a little blue-and-white platter that lay on the white cloth near her elbow. "Have a bit more bacon, Dirk. One of these nice curly slivers that are so crisp."

"I've finished my breakfast, Mother." He rose.

The following autumn saw him a student of architecture at Cornell. He worked hard, studied even during his vacation.

He would come home to the heat and humidity of the Illinois summers and spend hours each day in his own room that he had fitted up with a long work-table and a drawing board. His T-square was at hand; two triangles—a 45 and a 60; his compass; a pair of dividers. Selina sometimes stood behind him watching him as he carefully worked on the tracing paper. His contempt for the local architecture was now complete. Especially did he hold forth on the subject of the apartment houses that were mushrooming on every street in Chicago from Hyde Park on the south to Evanston on the north. Chicago was very elegant in speaking of these; never called them "flats"; always apartments. In front of each of these (there were usually six to a building) was stuck a little glass-enclosed cubicle known as a sun-parlor. In these (sometimes you heard them spoken of, grandly, as solariums) Chicago dwellers took refuge from the leaden skies, the heavy lake atmosphere, the gray mist and fog and smoke that so frequently swathed the city in gloom. They were done in yellow or rose cretonnes. Silk lampshades glowed therein, and flower-laden boxes. In these frank little boxes Chicago read its paper, sewed, played bridge, even ate its breakfast. It never pulled down the shades.

"Terrible!" Dirk fumed. "Not only are they hideous in themselves, stuck on the front of those houses like three pairs of spectacles; but the lack of decent privacy! They do everything but bathe in 'em. Have they never heard the advice given people who live in glass houses!"

By his junior year he was talking in a large way about the Beaux Arts. But Selina did not laugh at this. "Perhaps," she thought. "Who can tell! After a year or two in an office here, why not another year of study in Paris if he needs it."

Though it was her busiest time on the farm Selina went to Ithaca for his graduation in 1913. He was twenty-two and, she was calmly sure, the best-looking man in his class. Undeniably he was a figure to please the eye; tall, well-built, as his father had been, and blond, too, like his father, except for his eyes. These were brown—not so dark as Selina's, but with some of the soft liquid quality of her glance. They strengthened his face, somehow; gave him an ardent look of which he was not conscious. Women, feeling the ardor of that dark glance turned upon them, were likely to credit him with feelings toward themselves of which he was quite innocent. They did not know that the glance and its effect were mere matters of pigmentation and eye-conformation. Then, too, the gaze of a man who talks little is always more effective than that of one who is loquacious.

Selina, in her black silk dress, and her plain black hat, and her sensible shoes, was rather a quaint little figure among all those vivacious, bevoiled, and beribboned mammas. But a distinctive little figure, too. Dirk need not be ashamed of her. She eyed the rather paunchy, prosperous, middle-aged fathers and thought, with a pang, how much handsomer Pervus would have been than any of these, if only he could have lived to see this day. Then, involuntarily, she wondered if this day would ever have occurred, had Pervus lived. Chided herself for thinking thus.

When he returned to Chicago, Dirk went into the office of Hollis & Sprague, architects. But his work there was little more than that of draughtsman, and his weekly stipend could hardly be dignified by the term of salary. But he had large ideas about architecture and he found expression for his suppressed feelings on his week-ends spent with Selina at the farm.

"Baroque" was the word with which he dismissed the new Beachside hotel, north. He said the new Lincoln park bandstand looked like an igloo. He said that the city council ought to order the Potter Palmer mansion destroyed as a blot on the landscape, and waxed profane on the subject of the east face of the Public Library building, downtown.

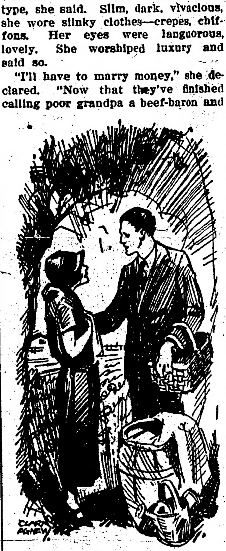
"Never mind," Selina assured him, happily. "It was all thrown up so hastily. Remember that just yesterday, or the day before—Chicago was an Indian fort, with tepees where towers are now, and mud wallows in place of asphalt. Beauty needs time to perfect it. Perhaps we've been waiting all these years for just such youngsters as you. And maybe some day I'll be driving down Michigan boulevard with a distinguished visitor—Roelf Pool, perhaps. Why not? Let's say Roelf Pool, the famous sculptor. And he'll say, 'Who designed that building—the one that is so strong and yet so light? So gay and graceful and yet so reticent!' And I'll say, 'Oh, that! That's one of the earlier efforts of my son, Dirk DeJong.'"

But Dirk pulled at his pipe moodily; shook his head. "Oh, you don't know, mother. It's so d—d slow. First thing you know I'll be thirty. And what am I! An office boy—or little more than that—at Hollis'."

During his university years Dirk had seen much of the Arnolds, Eugene and Paula, but it sometimes seemed to Selina that he avoided these meetings—these parties and week-ends. She was content that this should be so, for she guessed that the matter of money held him back. She thought it was well that he should realize the difference now. Eugene had his own car—one of five in the Arnold garage. Paula, too, had hers. Her fascination for Dirk was strong. Selina knew that, too. In the last year or two he had talked very little of Paula and that, Selina knew, meant that he was hard hit.

Sometimes Paula and Eugene drove out to the farm. Eugene would appear in rakish cap, loose London knickers, queer brogans with an English look about them, a carefully careless looseness about the hang and fit of his jacket. Paula did not affect sports clothes for herself. She was not the type, she said. Slim, dark, vivacious, she wore slinky clothes—crepes, chiffons. Her eyes were languorous, lovely. She worshiped luxury and said so.

"I'll have to marry money," she declared. "Now that they've finished calling poor grandpa a beef-baron and taken I don't know how many millions away from him, we're practically on the streets."



"You Like Me Better Than Any Man You Know."

"You look it!" from Dirk; and there was bitterness beneath his light tone.

"Well, it's true. All this silly muckraking in the past ten years or more. Poor father! Of course, granddad was pur-ty rough, let me tell you. I read some of the accounts of that last indictment—the 1910 one—and I must say I gathered that dear old Aug made Jesse James look like a philanthropist. I should think, at his age, he'd be a little scared. After all, when you're over seventy you're likely to have some doubts and fears about punishment in the next world. But not a grand old pirate like grandfather. He'll sack and burn and plunder until he goes down with the ship. And it looks to me as if the old boat had a pretty strong list to starboard right now. Father says himself that unless a war breaks, or something, which isn't at all likely, the packing industry is going to spring a leak."

"Elaborate figure of speech," murmured Eugene. The four of them—Paula, Dirk, Eugene and Selina—were sitting on the wide screened porch that Selina had had built at the southwest corner of the house. Paula was, of course, in the couch-swing. Occasionally she touched one slim languid foot to the floor and gave indolent impetus to the couch.

"It is, rather, isn't it? Might as well finish it, then. Darling Aug's been the grand old captain right through the vi'age. Dad's never been more than a pretty bum second mate. And as for you, Gene my love, cabin boy would be, y'understand me, big." Eugene had gone into the business a year before.

"What can you expect," retorted Eugene, "of a lad that hates salt pork? And every other kind of pig meat?" He despised the yards and all that went with it.

Selina got up and walked to the end of the porch. "There's Adam coming in with the last load for the day. He'll be driving into town now. Cornelius started an hour ago." She went down the steps on her way to oversee the loading of Adam Bras' wagon. At the bottom of the steps she turned. "Why can't you two stay to supper? You can quarrel comfortably right through the meal and drive home in the cool of the evening."

"I'll stay," said Paula, "thanks. If you'll have all kinds of vegetables, cooked and uncooked. And let me go out into the fields and pick 'em myself like Maud Muller or Marie Antoinette or any of those make-believe rustic gals."

In her French-heeled slippers and her filmy silk stockings she went out into the rich black furrows of the fields, Dirk carrying the basket.

"Asparagus," she ordered first. Then, "But where is it? Is that it!"

"You dig for it, idiot," said Dirk, stooping, and taking from his basket the queerly curved sharp knife or spud used for cutting the asparagus shoots. "Cut the shoots three or four inches below the surface."

"Oh, let me do it!" She was down on her silken knees in the dirt, ruined a goodly patch of the fine, tender shoots, gave it up and sat watching Dirk's expert manipulation of the knife. "Let's have radishes, and corn, and tomatoes and lettuce and peas and artichokes and—"

"Artichokes grow in California, not Illinois."

He was more than usually uncommunicative, and noticeably moody.

Paula remarked it. "Why the Othello brow?"

"You didn't mean that rot, did you? about marrying a rich man. You were joking, weren't you?"

"I wasn't. I'd hate being poor, or even just moderately rich. I'm used to money—loads of it. I'm twenty-four. And I'm looking around."

He kicked an innocent beet-top with his boot. "You like me better than any man you know."

"Of course I do. Just my luck."

"Well, then!"

"Well, then, let's take these weggibles in."

She made a pretense of lifting the heavy basket. Dirk snatched it roughly out of her hand so that she gave a little cry and looked ruefully down at the red mark on her palm. He caught her by the shoulder—even shook her a little. "Look here, Paula. Do you mean to tell me you'd marry a man simply because he happened to have a lot of money!"

"Perhaps not simply because he had a lot of money. But it certainly would be a factor, among other things."

Six months later Paula Arnold was married to Theodore A. Storm, a man of fifty, a friend of her father's, head of so many companies, stockholder in so many banks, director of so many corporations that even old Aug Hempel seemed a recluse from business in comparison. She never called him Teddy. No one ever did. Theodore Storm was a large man—not exactly stout, perhaps, but flabby. His inches saved him from grossness. He had a large white serious face, fine thick dark hair, graying at the temples. Within three years Paula had two children, a boy and a girl. "There! That's done," she said. Her marriage was a great mistake and she knew it. For the war, coming in 1914, a few months after her wedding, sent the Hempel-Arnold interests sky-rocketing. Millions of pounds of American beef and pork were shipped to Europe. In two years the Hempel fortune was greater than it ever had been. Paula was up to her eyes in relief work for Bleeding Belgium.

Dirk had not seen her in months. She telephoned him unexpectedly one Friday afternoon in his office at Hollis & Sprague's.

"Come out and spend Saturday and Sunday with us, won't you? We're running away to the country this afternoon. I'm so sick of Bleeding Belgium, you can't imagine. I'm sending the children out this morning. I can't get away so early. I'll call for you in the roadster this afternoon at four and drive you out myself."

"I don't think I—"

"I'll call for you at four. I'll be at the curb. Don't keep me waiting, will you?"

Charcoal

Charcoal is the form of amorphous carbon obtained by strongly heating wood. If required for fuel it can be obtained by the partial combustion of wood in heaps. The wood, cut into convenient and uniform lengths, is systematically piled in a mound-shaped heap with provision made for draft. The mound is covered with earth, except a small opening at the top. This is a charcoal kiln. When completed it is fired, and by means of slow combustion the wood is converted into charcoal, which is usually almost dead black in color and much lighter in weight than wood. That is the old way of producing charcoal.

Alaskan "Dog Car"

Almost every conceivable type of transportation is used to move the mails—railroads, steamboats, automobiles, airplanes, motor boats, wagons, horses, pneumatic tubes, belt conveyors, motorcycles, bicycles, the sled of the arctic, and even the "dog car," the Detroit News says.

The "dog car" is an Alaskan invention. An abandoned railroad runs out of Nome to a mining camp. The enterprising arctic circle mail man hitches his dog team to a hand car and scoots up the mountain side with t [illegible]

DAIRY

SATISFACTORY WAY OF MARKING CANS

In checking milk and cream shipments at depots, dairies, and creameries, we find that quite a number of the milk and cream cans are not properly marked so that they can positively be identified. Most any farmer or dairyman can tell his own can by some peculiar mark or particular dent or scratch on the can, but he must remember these marks mean nothing to a stranger.

Milk cans that are shipped in by truck sometimes have no marks on them or are partly worn off.

Usually the truck driver or the man at the milk plant can tell whose can it is, but if a strange truck driver or new man at the milk plant be on the job, he would be unable to recognize these cans.

Farmers who ship cream by truck or rail should not depend too much on the common tag that is usually used. It may get wet and the writing on it be obliterated or it may become torn off and lost.

There are several ways of marking your cans that are satisfactory. A brass name plate may be soldered on the can or a brass tag attached to the link which holds the cover to the can, bearing the owner's name and address.

Another way is to have your name and address embossed in the body of the can. This can be done when you buy a new can. The cost of embossing the name and address in the body of the can is about 50 cents for a single can and less where more are done at the same time.

If for some reason you prefer to paint your name and address on the cans, be sure to put it on plainly and look it over occasionally to assure yourself it can be understood by others.

If a can of cream should arrive without any tag or identification as to who sent the can, the only thing the express company can do is to sell the cream and await developments which come only after long delay and annoyance to all concerned. Remember the express company and the creameries and milk plants handle thousands of cans every day and they all look alike to them, if not properly marked.—W. H. Skitt, Dairy Inspector, Colorado State Dairy Commission.

Cow at Calving Time Is Entitled to Right Care

A Wisconsin dairy expert recommends the following care of the milk cow at calving time:

Have cows in good condition to insure reserve energy and body tissues for milk production.

Provide a comfortable box stall or suitable place for calving.

Be prepared to treat an attack of milk fever by having a milk-fever outfit to inflate udder with air.

Do not milk cows completely dry for 48 hours after calving.

Feed cows sparingly the first few days after calving.

Warm water and a few quarts of scalded bran or oats and good hay is sufficient for the first day or two after calving. Gradually work cows on to full feed, which ordinarily requires two to three weeks.

Be careful not to overfeed.

Remove the afterbirth if necessary inside of 48 hours after calving, and do not allow the cow to eat it.

Remove the calf from its mother after the first two to four days, and teach it to drink from a pail.

Produce High Producers to Make Cow Profitable

No one can tell with certainty just what the daughters of a pure bred dairy sire will produce until after they have been milked, but it can be stated with certainty that the daughters of common or scrub cows sired by a good pure bred dairy sire will be better than their dams. As nearly as can be estimated the average production of the western dairy cow is under 2,600 pounds of milk per year. If this milk tested 4 per cent the average butterfat yield per year would be 104 pounds. With feed at present prices, approximately one-half the dairy cows are below the production that will yield a satisfactory profit. Economy and logic indicate that the most satisfactory method of obtaining higher-yielding dairy cattle is to breed them. The poorer cows can be replaced by better ones and then pure-bred sires from high-producing cows can be used to build up the production of the present herds of the state.

Keeping Up Milk Flow

Cows at the beginning of their lactation period are more sensitive to change in feed, water and weather than when they are nearer to the end of lactation. If a cow is so affected that her milk production drops down shortly after calving, it is almost impossible by the most careful management to bring her production back. This means that a successful dairyman must plan in advance so that his cows will be amply fed on a balanced ration

Holds Overshoes On

Those who traverse muddy roads will be interested in a recently patented device for preventing overshoes from being pulled off by deep mud. It is in the shape of two metal grippers that clamp the overshoe to the shoe itself. For a high shoe there is a hook that is attached to the top of the shoe and extends down to hold the gripping jaws. The jaws are movable so that too much wear will not be brought to bear on one spot.—Scientific American.

Time Enough

The impatient diner sent for the manager of the restaurant. "See here!" he exclaimed, "I ordered cold roast beef 30 minutes ago and I haven't got it yet."

"How long ago?"

"Thirty minutes."

"Good gracious, I'll have to see about that. It should be cold by this time."—Boston Transcript.

Man's Ambitions

Every normal man has two great ambitions. First, to own his home. Second, to own a car to get away from his home.

Why That Bad Back?

Is backache keeping you upset? Feel all tired out—so nervous and dispirited you can hardly keep going? Then look to your kidneys! Your kidneys rid the body of poisonous waste. But if they lag, impurities accumulate and poison the whole system. Then one is apt to suffer backache, stabbing pains, headaches, dizziness, and other annoying kidney irregularities. If your kidneys are sluggish, help them with a diuretic. Use Doan's Pills. They are praised the world over. Ask your neighbor!

A North Dakota Case

Mrs. A. M. Jorgenson, Rugby, N. D., says: "I had attacks of kidney complaint that caused a dull ache through the small of my back. I became so lame I could hardly stoop and my back hurt terribly when doing my housework. I have never found anything to cure me of these attacks as well as Doan's Pills."

World's Largest Book

Vienna claims the biggest book in the world. It is in the Dominican cloister carefully mounted in a case in one of the corridors. The book is made up of parchment leaves mounted on thin wooden borders. On the parchment is maintained a death list of the cloister. The first entry was made in 1410, but even this date is 184 years more recent than the date of the cloister, for this home of Dominican monks was founded in 1226, under the Babenbergers.

How She Knew

A city-bred girl married a young farmer. As her husband came into the house one day she exclaimed:

"Oh, John, I found four ducks' eggs among the two dozen you brought in this morning."

"Ducks' eggs?" said John. "How do you know they were ducks' eggs?"

"Why," she answered, "I put them in water and four of them floated."

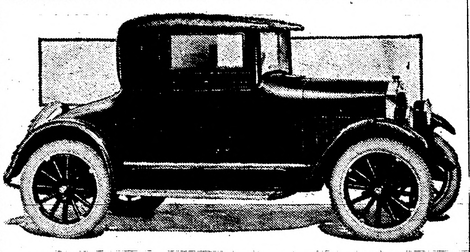
STRIKING FEATURES OF NEW STAR COUPSTER



Flexible door windows that may be lowered or raised like pullman car curtains and that disappear within the top of the body when raised are a striking feature of the new Star coupster.

In reality the coupster is a convertible car, affording all the comforts of closed car transportation, yet convertible into an open car by the simple expedient of raising two disappearing windows—a five-second operation. For all practical purposes it is two cars in one.

EFFICIENCY AND SAFETY OF CARS

It is difficult to believe that the oil pressure gauges and the ampere-meters which now appear on the instrument boards of virtually all makes of cars were once regarded by many as unnecessary frills. Today there are a number of accessories being offered which are similarly regarded, which is the same as saying that they would be appreciated if only their advantages were better known.

By equipping a car with some of these fitments, greater satisfaction, efficiency and safety will result. Add front and rear bumpers to the car, attach one of the many rear signaling devices, keep a set of anti-skid chains handy and the car will be enormously benefited in proportion to the cost of the protection. Frequently such safety devices add to the car's appearance and thus not only help protect the owner's original investment, but add to it. A spotlight attached to the windshield and played upon the road may prevent wrecking the car in a ditch.

Take efficiency as another instance. A car that is operated without proper regulation of the cooling system is at all times running inefficiently. This is especially true in winter when the engine is constantly operated at the wrong temperature, either boiling over because the radiator is covered with the lap-robe or running cold because there is no covering at all. The market now offers several radiator covers with openings which can be operated from the dash.

Along the efficiency line are other devices which are destined to filter the gasoline before it is admitted to the carburetor, thus preventing the entrance of dirty or watered gasoline to the carburetor or engine. A device of this character may pay for itself within a month after it is installed.

Then there are shock absorbers, which in addition to giving greater riding comfort, save the springs from breakage on the rebound and thus increase the usefulness of the car by preventing breakdowns. Even cut-outs which were at one time regarded as toys for the speed maniacs are now shown to have a very important use.

Regardless of the selling points of each accessory or all of them as a group, it is a fact that any one of them adds to the second-hand value of a car. So the motorist not only has the use of the accessories with which he equips his car and the savings on insurance, inconvenience, repair bills, etc., but he gets a return premium when he goes to sell the car.

Good Advice Is to Give Machine the Once-Over

There's economy, also satisfaction in giving your car the once-over in the spring, then if it needs replacements or anything else to bring it back to perfect form, have it done as quickly as possible.

Naturally the toll of a year's driving is most severe, and generally there is a reminder or two. Right here the old stitch in time principle works out. When the car is restored to its best shape, almost as good as the day it was bought, riding in it is far more enjoyable, also it will bring a much better price if you care to sell or expect to trade it in on a new car.

Letting your motor car run down is false economy. Eventually it costs you more and in the interim you are not happiest when riding along the highways.

Even little things which you may think are of no special consequence develop into big items in repair bills if allowed to run on without interruption.

Windshield Rattle

When the windshield glass becomes loose in its frame, it causes an annoying rattle. It is very difficult to close the frame so that it will grip the glass more securely without the possibility of breaking the latter. If the glass is not too loose the rattle can be eliminated by filling the space in the frame with shellac. This can be applied with a sharp pointed stick or a brush and should be applied slowly so that it will pack tightly in the opening.

WATER INJURY TO TIRES IS SMALL

Running Through Stream Is Not Injurious.

Now and then in the course of an automobile trip a car has to pass through a stream, and the question is sometimes discussed whether the action of the water is harmful to the tires. The same question arises when the car is out in a heavy rain.

Such a wetting is practically nothing at all, either for damage or improvement. At any rate, the effect on the tire is not harmful. Two chief constituents of a tire are rubber and cotton, both vegetable substances, and as a rule water does not injure vegetable matter. As illustrative of this point, there is the old but true story of the farmer who, when one of his rubber boots fell into a well, placed the other on a shelf in a closet. Twelve years later when the well was cleaned the lost boot was found to be in excellent condition, but the boot on the shelf had fallen into ruin.

If running through a brook resulted in cooling a tire the effect would be decidedly beneficial, but a quick dash through the water has little effect on the heated air within the tire and consequently the temperature change in the tire after its bath is negligible.

Water itself apparently does no harm to tires, but the combination of air and moisture commonly known as humidity is very destructive, especially on the cotton in ordinary fabric tires. The moist air works in between the layers of the fabric and rots them out, sometimes even before the tires leave the dealer's storeroom. Cord tires stand humidity better.

The harmful effect of moist air is the chief reason why, when tires are stored, they should be kept in a dry atmosphere. As sunlight is also harmful, the storage place should be darkened.

Shabby Tires Are Not Favored for Any Car

Shabby tires on a good-looking car! Yet stand on any street corner today and count the number of patched-up, dilapidated tires which are being used to the last mile. The cost of keeping these tires running for a few thousand miles would nearly pay for new ones. Mileage such as this comes high.

Tire conservation does not mean picking up a decrepit tire and putting it back into service at a big repair cost just to save a little rubber left in the tread. It means taking care of the tire from the first so that it will be able to deliver all the mileage built into it by the maker. When tires are so far worn that they are soon to blow, it is poor economy to repair them. Such a course means sacrifice of the inner tube as well.

Cheap, makeshift patches, boots and temporary repairs of all kinds are now being called into use as never before, but patching up an old casing in which separation of fabric plies has already begun, cannot give the freedom from tire trouble on which the pleasure in motoring so largely depends.

Tying in Spring Leaves Will Prevent Spreading

Since the leaves in a spring have a tendency to spread apart, it is often hard to replace the spring tie-bolt in autos or trucks.

The easy way is to grip the head of the tie-bolt in a vise, and put all but the last four leaves one on top of the other. The last four leaves are put on crosswise, or spread around like the ribs of an umbrella, which allows the nut to be easily started on the bolt.

With the nut on the bolt swing the bottom cross leaf into place. Then each succeeding leaf will slide easily into position. Then tighten the tie-bolt nut. Of course, the clamps on each end will have to be removed until the spring is assembled.

Anything These Days

Running downhill recently a driver found to his utter surprise that a motor truck, supposedly at rest in the downhill position on the right side of the road, was actually going uphill backwards. The driver could not get it through his head for a moment and nearly lost control of his machine trying to dope it out, which showed that he was not prepared to expect most anything nowadays. The truck driver was utilizing the lower gear ratio of reverse in order to enable the engine to pull up an extra heavy load.

JOHN F. STEVENS.

Former General Manager, Great Northern, Receives Highest Honor In Engineering World.

Achievements of John F. Stevens, famous engineer, formerly of St. Paul, who assisted in the building of the Panama Canal, were portrayed at New York, March 23rd, at the American Engineering Foundation ceremonies marking the presentation to Mr. Stevens of the John Fritz Gold Medal, awarded by a special board representing the four great engineering societies of America, the American Society of Civil Engineers, American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers, American Society of Mechanical Engineers and American Institute of Electrical Engineers. President Ralph Budd of the Great Northern Railway delivered one of the principal addresses on this occasion. Mr. Budd was chief engineer of the Panama railway under Mr. Stevens.

President Budd told of Mr. Stevens' prominence in railroad construction work in the West during the period of its greatest building activity between the years 1876 and 1893. Notable among his achievements was the discovery of Marias Pass in the Rockies of Northwestern Montana, where he was sent by James J. Hill in 1889 to find, if possible, a shorter route across the Rockies for the Great Northern Railway than had been discovered by any other railroad or Government surveys. It seemed up to that time that the line would have to go about as far south as Helena or Butte to cross the mountains. Mr. Stevens' discovery of Marias Pass in the winter of 1889 obviated this necessity and gave to the Great Northern Railway a lower pass across the Rockies than that of any other railroad in the United States. This was a notable engineering achievement.

In speaking of Mr. Stevens' discovery of Marias Pass, Mr. Budd said, "Railroad reconnaissance on the scale then undertaken in major mountain ranges and far from the bases of operation called for more courage, physical strength, and perseverance than any other work which an engineer was required to perform. With these must be combined thorough familiarity with frontier and Indian life, technical skill and training in determining what gradients and alignment the country afforded, and sound judgment as to the cost of building, together with a sense of location and direction which amounted almost to instinct. The necessities of the times brought forth a numerous group of engineers who, to an extraordinary degree, possessed all of these attainments. In this remarkable company, John F. Stevens was an outstanding figure. We do not have any details of the hardships of this reconnaissance. Hardships were accepted as a matter of course and almost never mentioned. We do know that his investigation carried him well into the winter and that his persistent search enabled him to report that, on December 11, 1889, he had located and surmounted Marias Pass, and that it was on the line of the direct route westward. The thoroughness with which he had covered the country enabled him to say that it was the lowest and best pass across the Rockies in the northern United States. The actual location of the Great Northern through it at an altitude of 5,212 feet, on a 1 per cent grade westbound and 1.8 per cent eastbound fully confirmed his report."

The Great Northern Railway has selected a site along the right of way at Marias Pass in the heart of the Rockies of Glacier National Park on which it will erect a monument to Mr. Stevens in commemoration of the contribution his engineering genius has made to the progress of the Great Northwest.

Following this, Mr. Stevens located Stevens Pass in the Cascades for the Great Northern in 1890. Referring to this achievement, Mr. Budd said, "I believe it was the last piece of actual field work he did, and it is, indeed, the work of a master. Mr. Stevens remained in the Cascades until track laying was completed through to the Coast, January 5, 1893, a little more than three years after the discovery of Marias Pass. He continued with the Great Northern until 1903, the last eight years as Chief Engineer of the system, and two years as General Manager."

Other outstanding accomplishments of Mr. Stevens in the engineering world were the organizing, planning and direction of the construction of the Panama Canal from 1905 to 1907, the construction of the Seattle, Portland & Spokane Railway and several other western lines of the "Hill System" in Oregon and Washington, and the rehabilitation and operation of the crippled railways of Russia during the years 1917 to 1922.

THE FRIENDLINESS OF MODERN BANKING

By WILLIAM E. KNOX

President American Bankers Association

William E. Knox

Until a few years ago savings banks were extremely austere institutions. They were founded to do the kindliest thing in the world, that is, to take care of the savings of poor people, but they did it in a most repellent way. They did not extend to their banking business any of the courtesies or any of the amenities of life whatever. They simply took the money, did the depositor the favor of taking it, and gave it back to him when he wanted it. And then they considered their full duty done.

The tellers and clerks treated the depositors as though they were entirely beneath them. I, myself, heard a depositor, an old Irishwoman, say to a teller who had been snappish with her: "Then you better keep a civil tongue in your head. It is the likes of me that keeps the likes of you in your place." In that brief and caustic and well-deserved comment she had summed up the whole situation in a nutshell.

There was nothing warm, nothing cordial, but as the years went by those who worked at the windows got on friendly and kindly relations with the people coming to the windows. Here and there some man got so close to the people that they began to tell him their personal affairs and ask for his advice, and of late years the banks, too, have been stressing the human element. They have struck a better way of approaching people.

They have taken steps, for instance, to try to get as close as they can to the foreign element. That is one of the great problems in all the large manufacturing and business centers. A great mass of foreigners come here and get together in groups, but they do not get any real touch of Americanism. They are just as Jewish and just as Italian ten or twenty years after they come here as they were the day they came, because nobody appears to take any particular interest in them. But when an institution like a savings bank begins to take an interest in the problems of the people, to let them feel that here is a group of people engaged in a business that is willing to listen to them, their troubles, their trials, is willing to advise them, willing to steer them straight, willing to be sort of Big Brother to them, I do not think there is any better Americanization work than that being done.

That is the kind of work the progressive savings bank is starting on,—telling people that if they will come to them with their troubles they will be glad to give them the best disinterested advice, to do things for them free, that otherwise they would be charged for by somebody. They are willing to advise them when they get a little more money than the savings bank can take care of, what they can invest it in, or in some cases what not to invest it in.

If the savings and commercial banks all over the country adopt that particular attitude toward our foreign fellow-citizens, it will give them an entirely different view of Americanism. It is this changed attitude that has resulted in the tremendous growth of deposits that have taken place in the savings banks since the war. There has been a different spirit breathed into the relations between the depositors and the men on the other side of the counter.

Let's Get a 92-Scoring Butter!

It is very important to deliver your cream twice a week in order to get a 92-scoring butter.

All our butter is scored and inspected by the Government Inspector and whatever score he places on our butter is the basis on which the Creameries Ass'n makes payment.

Cream a week old will never make butter scoring 92 even tho it is sweet. Our biggest trouble is with old flavor which shows up in butter a week or so after it is made.

It is very encouraging the way our patrons have realized the necessity of delivering their cream twice a week yet some seem to think that as long as their cream is sweet it will make the highest grade butter.

Co-operate with us and you will get more money for your butterfat. In this way only we will get a 92-scoring butter.

I. C. C. WILL PROBE ROAD RECEIVERSHIP

Commission Wants To Find Out How Milwaukee Has Been Managed.

Washington.—A special inquiry into the management and financing of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul railroad, which recently was thrown into receivership, was ordered Saturday by the interstate commerce commission. The three receivers of the property, H. E. Byram, former president of the road; Mark W. Potter, who resigned from the commerce commission last February; and Edward J. Brundage, were made respondents along with the corporation in the commission's proceeding. Times and places for hearings will be fixed later.

The commission's order said that the step was taken upon its own motion and that the inquiry would concern "the history, management, financial, and other operations, accounts, and practices of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul railroad, in order to determine the manner and method in which the business of said company has been conducted, with a view to making a report and such order or orders as may seem appropriate."

The St. Paul system, one of the largest in the country, was voluntarily placed in receivership with the announcement by its directors that the corporation would be unable to refund or refinance a $48,000,000 bond issue which falls due in June. Earnings during recent years were said to have been inadequate to sustain the fixed charges and expenses, though the valuation of the road is said to be close to $700,000,000.

In financial circles, some criticism of the receivership as unnecessary has been voiced, and Senator Lenroot, Republican, Wisconsin, recently announced that he would ask a congressional investigation of the subject.

RUM ROW FLEET DOWN TO 12

Officials Assert It Is Practically Impossible to Run Blockade.

New York.—Only 12 ships, manned by dejected crews, remain of more than 80 rum row floating liquor warehouses after 10 days of the coast guard's blockade of the Atlantic coast.

This figure is official. The rum sellers were checked up in an inspection cruise of a dozen newspapermen and representatives of press associations which was concluded Saturday. Four days Lieutenant Commander Stephen S. Yeandle, aide to the coast guard's commandant, Rear Admiral Billard, and who is known as the official's "ears and eyes" on the blockade front, cruised the Atlantic waters from Nantucket light on the north to Atlantic City on the south with the newspaper observers aboard the coast guard cable cutter Pequot.

The inspection cruise, probably the most comprehensive ever made of the mid-Atlantic area, which Commander Yeandle termed the national shame, revealed that little, if any, contraband liquor is getting ashore through New York, Long Island, New England or New Jersey channels. Through these channels, up to May 5, the day the coast guard offensive got under way, flowed the greatest flood of liquor that the government has had to contend against, the coast guard officials admitted.

UNKNOWN HORSE WINS DERBY

Premier Jockey Wins Kentucky Classic After Begging for Mount.

Louisville.—Between a brisk shower that sprang up a few minutes before the start of the race and a terrific downpour that soaked thousands of spectators to the skin, Flying Ebony, a little horse, black as night, raced to immortal victory in the $50,000 Kentucky Derby Saturday, defeating a field of nineteen of the nation's finest three-year-olds.

The little black colt, owned by Gifford A. Cochran of New York, and superbly ridden by Earl Sande, America's premier jockey, finished one and a half lengths ahead of Captain Hal, a Louisville owned colt, stepping the mile and a quarter distance in 2:07 3-5. Son of John came thundering back of Captain Hal, losing second place by a scant nose. Single Foot, trailing three lengths behind Son of John, finished fourth, a half length ahead of Step Along, in fifth place.

Flying Ebony, coupled in the company of eight others, comprising the mutuel field, paid his backers $8.30 for each $2 invested on his chances.

Russia Gets Plane Fleet.

Moscow.—The railway and river transport workers of Soviet Russia has presented the Moscow government with a fleet of 31 airplanes, the cost of which was defrayed by popular subscription among the workers. The squadron has been named the "Djerinsky escadrille" and two of the planes have been christened "Bakinski" and "Wierzorklewicz" in memory of the two Polish Communist officers who were killed recently by a Polish sergeant while they were being conveyed to the Russian border for exchange.

BRITISH WAR ON REDS

Action Follows Official Charge That Moscow is Back of Revolution Plots.

London — The Daily Chronicle says the police are taking strong measures against the bolsheviki in London. The permits of numerous persons to remain in England have been cancelled and the renewal of others refused, the number thus dealt with mounting into the hundreds.

Quantities of literature also have been seized. In consequence of these measures, the paper declares, the bolshevik book shop here, where the newspapers Pravda, Izvestia and other publications were sold. has been closed and the official bolshevik paper in England, the Soviet Union Review, has ceased publication.

PROBE PRICE MANIPULATION

Group Declared to Have 'Cleaned Up' Millions in Wheat Pit.

Washington — The department of agriculture's investigation into the alleged manipulation of the Chicago wheat market by a group of millionaire operators has not thus far shown sufficient evidence to warrant seeking of criminal indictments, it was learned officially.

The inquiry has been under way for nearly a week and will be pressed vigorously, officials said, to determine whether there was wrong doing through violation of the grain futures act of 1922.

The investigation is being made not only to punish violators of the act, but to determine whether changes in the law are necessary to curb future wide fluctuations in grain prices and consequent financial disaster and instability to farmers and agrarian interests.

CARS FLOOD BRITISH PORTS

Cars Are Imported At Rate of 1,000 Daily to Beat Tax Imposition.

The Baldwin government's budget, which reimposed protective measures for the British automobile industry, fixed July 1 as the date for the tax to become effective, but the cabinet has become alarmed because of the unprecedented dumping of automobiles in all British ports and it is understood in British business circles, although not yet announced to the general public, that the reimposed duty of 33 1-3 per cent will become effective on June 1.

ARREST 136 MINE STRIKERS

Marchers Also Jailed by West Virginia State Police.

Fairmont, W. Va.—State police and county officers arrested 136 striking miners at Granttown, W. Va., 10 miles north of here, where, it was said, some of the miners were on picket duty while others were marching through the streets.

This was held by authorities to be in violation of a recent court order issued by Judge L. S. Schwenck.

187,000 Babies Die Each Year.

Studies were made by Dr. Robert M. Woodbury of 23,000 infants in eight cities. The cases were followed through the first year of life. Latest figures show that 187,000 babies under the age of 1 year annually die in the United States, occurring in 28,988 cases during the first month after birth.

GENERAL MILES DIES SUDDENLY

Career Ended as Trumpets Announce Opening of Sawdust Ring Pageant.

Washington — Lieutenant General Nelson A. Miles, nestor of American army leaders, premier Indian fighter, diplomat and author, has taken up the long trail.

His career, spanning four of the six important military periods of his country's history, ended suddenly in the big tent of a circus just as a fanfare of trumpets announced the opening pageant.

General Miles was surrounded by happy children, including those of his own family's third generation.

The body was removed, underneath the tier of seats, to the outside, where a hasty examination resulted in the diagnosis that death had resulted from myocardities and acute dilation of the heart.

Despite his advanced years—86—the death of General Miles came as an exterme shock to his intimate associates. During the 22 years which have elapsed since he was retired "for age," he had maintained an active interest in current affairs, particularly those which touched either the army or navy.

Was "Boy General."

General Miles was one of the "boy generals" of the Civil war. At the age of 25 he had risen from the rank of first lieutenant of volunteers to that of major general, and was commanding an army division of 25,000 men. At the peak of his military career he was commanding general of the army, was one of the few high ranking officers of the regular establishment to attain his poistion without West Point training.

FRENCH TACKLE WAR DEBT

Caillaux Declares Country Must Face the Music.

Paris — The French cabinet, in secret session, formally instructed Finance Minister Caillaux and Foreign Minister Briand to study the question of inter-allied debts, and suggest possible solutions for their payment.

This is the first time since the war debts were incurred that a French cabinet has formally taken up the question of inter-allied debts, it was said in diplomatic circles.

Caillaux told the cabinet, it was said, that if his plans for the restoration of France's credit abroad were to be carried out, France must face the problem of inter-allied debts and reach a settlement as soon as the budget was balanced.

ASKS SEPARATE ARMS CONTROL

Amendment Would Divorce Body From League of Nations—Americans Win Point.

Geneva—The American delegation to the League of Nations international conference for the control of traffic in arms and munitions officially filed an amendment to divorce the arms convention from the League of Nations.

The presentation of the American amendment caused something of a sensation.

The convention which it is proposed to amend provides that a central international office shall be established by the council of the League of Nations for the collection and publication of documents of all kinds relative to traffic in arms.

The United States won her point that arms can be shipped to a foreign government without previous recognition of that government. Although this point was won, it was in effect neither a victory for the United States nor a defeat for South American countries, which have been insisting on necessary recognition, for the resolution which was adopted unanimously was accepted on condition that an agreement would be reached later as to how shipments of war material can be effected when the importing country is in the throes of a revolution.

The SANDMAN STORY

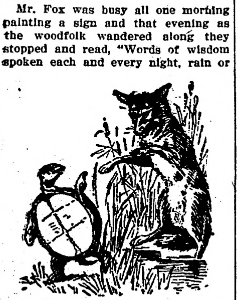
MR. FOX AND HIS RIVAL

ONCE there lived in some deep woods a fox who had gathered during his years of roaming about the country a great deal of wisdom. As he was now getting rather old he decided to turn his knowledge to good account.

"Surely all the things I know are worth something," he reasoned. "I have learned many things through experience. Some I paid for by suffering and other things I learned by keeping my ears and eyes alert.

"Therefore I should be paid by those who care to profit by my teachings and I shall today post a sign on my door telling the woodfolk where they can listen each night to words of wisdom."

Mr. Fox was busy all one morning painting a sign and that evening as the woodfolk wandered along they stopped and read, "Words of wisdom spoken each and every night, rain or moonlight to those who wish to hear them, for a small fee."



Mr. Turtle Left Mr. Fox Wallowing About in the Mud.

Those who first saw the sign ran to tell others and pretty soon a crowd had gathered around the door of Mr. Fox, which made his eyes twinkle, for the larger the crowd the more he would get in fees.

Old Mr. Turtle was stretching his neck, but he could not see well enough to read, so he asked Mr. Rabbit, who was nearest to him, to read what was printed on the sign.

The next day the woodfolk saw on Mr. Turtle's door this sign: "Mr. Turtle, who for over a hundred years has been gathering wisdom, will lecture each night to those who care to improve their minds. A collection will be taken to meet expenses."

"A new broom sweeps clean," quoted Mr. Fox when he heard about Mr. Turtle's sign, and then he added "but 'too many cooks spoil the broth,' so I must use my wits to get ahead of my rival, Mr. Turtle."

Mr. Fox was running along when he happened to see a bed of nice mushrooms; and knowing that Mr. Turtle liked mushrooms, Mr. Fox had an idea.

He turned right about and ran back to the woods, but he did not stop at his own home. Oh, no; he kept right on until he reached the home of Mr. Turtle.

Mr. Fox said: "Mr. Turtle, I saw a bed of fine mushrooms over the hill; thought you might like to know, as you are fond of them."

Mr. Turtle thanked him and said he would go right over and look at them.

Mr. Turtle had stayed late in the mushroom bed, and when he started for home he knew he would never be able to reach there in time for his lecture unless some one gave him a lift and when he saw Mr. Fox trotting along, he remembered his ancestor who had won that famous race hundreds of years before from Mr. Hare.

Mr. Fox ran over to the farm, got his supper and was running back at a pretty fast rate of speed; so he did not know when Mr. Turtle reached out his hand and grasped the tip of his tail and held fast to it.

Mr. Fox was thinking of getting home, and how Mr. Turtle must be waddling along somewhere far from home, for he was very certain he went to the mushroom bed. So he was not as careful as he usually was to look where he was going.

Over a stone wall leaped Mr. Fox, and the next thing he knew he was deep in a pond of—mostly mud.

A mud bath to Mr. Turtle was fun, and if he had not been in a hurry to reach home he would have liked nothing better than to stay there; but he crawled out and left Mr. Fox wallowing about in the mud.

Before Mr. Fox had come along Mr. Turtle had had time to think, and it had entered his wise old head that Mr. Fox had reasons for being so kind in telling him about the bed of mushrooms, so he called to him as he waddled away: "'There's many a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip,' Mr. Fox. I shall remember to explain that saying to my audience tonight and tell them, too, how you are unavoidably detained."

Mr. Fox knew that his rival would reach home in time to give his lecture, and he knew, too, that he would be the laughing stock of all the wood folk by morning; so, when he did at last get out of the mud he ran for home and pulled down his sign, and then out of the woods he went, to make a home so far away that Mr. Turtle would have to crawl years and years before he found him.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT

By F. A. WALKER

UPLAND SOLITUDES

IT IS becoming a mooted question among observing educators as to whether our present-day diversions do not often dwarf the budding intellects of the young and carry them far afield in the wrong direction.

With the possible exception of music, the universal language, our entertainments, as a rule, have become mere frivolities, appealing to the baser passions, the redeeming features in almost all cases being the superb stage settings.

With their deft brushes the scenery painters seem to be doing more for the elevation of the mind than the wielders of the stage pen.

Without the exquisite scenes many of our popular plays would indeed become miserable makeshifts, incapable of holding the boards a fortnight.

The fine art of acting is being relegated to the past. There is a craving for the gross, glaring, flagrant and thumping, rather than for the refined, uplifting and ennobling, doubtless due to perverted tastes and cravings for sensationalism and excitement.

The intermediate colors and fine shadings of the older school have given way to higher tones whose intensities and limits have about been reached.

Just what will follow cannot be guessed, except to hint in a vague way that this modern tower of Babylon will some day suddenly topple over, tumble noisily at our feet and leave us babbling in strange tongues, wondering what confusion means!

There is in the human heart an everlasting yearning for something new, and no one apparently knows what to suggest.

It is just possible that we need now, more than anything else, the upland solitudes, where we may get in the pure, clear atmosphere and reflect awhile without molestation from the crude scarlet letters and blinding lights which have warped our judgment and dulled our finer sensibilities.

We need these upland solitudes far more often than we may suspect, for it is among them that we gather new strength for the higher duties of life, a keener conception of our infirmities, a deeper realization of our lack of human kindness and a sickening sense at the loss of our faith in the good, the clean, the noble and in humanity itself!

"What's in a Name?"

By MILDRED MARSHALL

Facts about your name; its history; meaning; whence it was derived; significance; your lucky day, lucky jewel

FAITH

FROM a Biblical source comes the charming Faith, which sprang into popular usage during the vogue of Puritanical names. The prevalence of appellatives which denoted abstract virtues marked the beginning of Puritanism in England, and many such names came under the ban from other classes because of the widespread dislike of the "Round Heads."

But the simple beauty of Faith, as well as the divine virtue for which the name was symbol, kept her popularity undimmed. For was she not one of the trio whom St. Paul commends to the Corinthians, saying: "And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity."

The Puritans brought Faith to New England when they migrated from their native land, and the name has been universally popular there, at the same time spreading to other sections of the country. It is one of the few feminine appellatives which cannot be contracted.

The pearl is Faith's talismanic gem. It is a fitting symbol of purity for its wearer who will possess enviable charm and affability and have many friends. Wednesday is her lucky day and 5 her lucky number.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

THE THRESHOLD

IN a much-talked-about recent novel the doctor of Gopher Prairie says to his bride, "There! I meant to have you lifted over the threshold." Which shows that the old custom of lifting brides over the threshold when they first enter their new home still lingers among us, as it is, also, a feature of rural weddings in England and Scotland. The mixing up in the minds of our remote ancestors of spiritual and material things caused the threshold to be regarded in a peculiarly mystic manner.

As its name implies, it prevented the grain, the body of the corn-spirit, from sliding out when the chaff flew away at the threshing time. It was that part of the entrance to the house over which all must pass that entered it. Consequently there was a constant struggle to facilitate the entrance of good influences and keep out the spirits of evil by "doctoring" the threshold. Cauls were buried under their neighbor's thresholds, personal relics calculated to facilitate the entrance of malign influences. A large nail was driven into the threshold to keep death from entering.

On Walpurgis night the German peasant still lays flowers and branches upon his threshold to keep out the witches; and chips from a threshold used to be thought a valuable ingredient in making smoke for the fumigation of cattle. So as no one knows what witches or evil spirits may have done to the threshold it is better that a bride, at the critical moment of her entrance to her new home, should be lifted over it to avoid contagion from the malign influences from touching the possibly-infected door-sill.

A LINE OF CHEER

By John Kendrick Bangs.

A WORD FROM SPRING

A GENTLE breeze came whispering by today,
And paused a moment on its laughing way.
"I'm just in from the South." it said, "and I
Have stopped to tell you that the spring is nigh,
And all her styles
Are based on smiles;
And when she comes her panniers will be full
Of blossoms fragrant and delectable;
And in her train a gay and choral throng
Of happy birds will wing their way along;
And brand new leaves to clothe the naked trees
She'll bring and spread as lavish as you please;
And all the country o'er
Her flowers will dance as on a ballroom floor,
That all may know in these dark days of dread
That Youth, and Grace, and Beauty are not dead.
But with us still,
For man to make such use of as he will."

Krupps Making Artificial Teeth

Scientific Instruments Have Replaced Gun Products.

Essen, Germany.—Quantity production three years ago of battleship turrets and rapid-fire guns was a feature of the work here of the firm of Friedrich Krupp, once the symbol throughout the world of armament manufacture; today this organization is making artificial teeth and surgical instruments.

Swords, or their more hideous modern successors, the "Big Bertha" cannon, have literally been beaten into plowshares. The Krupps now turn out agricultural machinery, railway engines, automobile trucks, merchant ships, steel bridges, and a thousand and one smaller things.

Artificial teeth and surgical instruments are but two of the many minor articles manufactured in what was once the most formidable armament plant in the world.

Use Same Staff.

A striking feature of the transformation is the fact that the change has come about without change of technical engineers or skilled workers.

In fact, one reason for turning into such activities as watch and clock making, moving picture manufacturing, and the construction of delicate mechanisms for optical and microscopical instruments, was the consideration that a large staff of skilled workers and engineers used to be engaged in perfecting the delicate mechanisms of rapid-firing guns and the like.

These men, after the war, were compelled to turn from inventing and constructing engines of death to devising machinery for the advancement of civilization. Thus new types of turbine engines are being evolved, Diesel motors are being improved upon, better processes of making steel are being experimented with.

A word as to the magnitude of the Krupp plant at Essen: The area covered by the various buildings is almost 800 acres. The private railway which connects the various sections with each other travels nearly five miles from one end of the plant to the other.

The largest of the buildings, that devoted to locomotive construction, covers an area of 800,000 square feet and has a frontage of 1,640 feet. The four hydraulic presses for compressing blocks of steel exert a pressure of 4,000 tons each. Some of the smelters employed for bringing high-grade steel to the melting point, have a capacity up to 90 tons each.

The plant is equipped to employ 115,000 men. That was the figure reached during the peak of war-time production, and applies to Essen alone. If one adds other plants, at Kiel and the Ruhr valley, the Krupps can furnish employment to 180,000 men.

Only 28,000 Now Working.

As a matter of fact, however, only 28,000 workers are now on the pay roll. The Krupps are going through the same readjustments which great numbers of American firms had to face when the war was over. Before the war they were doing a thriving business with 36,000 men employed. If they can get back to the pre-war footing, they will probably consider themselves lucky.

The impression made by the Krupp works today is a rather desolate one. Only in the department devoted to the construction of agricultural machinery does the place seem really busy. The railway locomotive construction department, for instance, is equipped to turn out one locomotive each working day, or about 300 a year.

At present it has orders for only 20 German locomotives, and a small number of wood-burning engines, intended for Brazil. Ship construction is at a low ebb, as the world generally is overstocked with ships.

Find Ancient Cemetery in Greek Excavations

Washington.—Important excavations of a prehistoric cemetery are about to be undertaken in Greece under auspices of the American School of Classical Study at Athens, according to information received by Prof. Edward Capp of Princeton university.

Work now being done at Corinth within the area of an old theater has resulted in several interesting finds. The operations at Corinth are regarded as the most important started by American archeologists in Greece and were made possible by gift from Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Morgan and Dr. T. Leslie Shear of Princeton.

Several pieces of statuary have been unearthed, as well as much pottery. Dr. Shear, who is in charge at Corinth, has also discovered the conduits leading to the source of the ancient water supply which brought water from Acrocorinth to the Fountain of Glauce, named after the wife of Jason the Argonaut, who was murdered by Medea.

The prehistoric cemetery which has been discovered will be the scene of new excavations. This work is made possible by a gift from the estate of Joseph C. Hoppin of Boston, and is in charge of the assistant director of the American school, Dr. C. W. Blegen.

Indian's Income Is $1,000 a Day

Willie Alexander Is Close to "Richest Indian" Title.

Cromwell, Okla.—Willie Alexander, 210-pound Creek Indian of Bixby, will give some other redskins of the Five Civilized Tribes a close race before the end of the year in a contest for the title of "richest Indian." Willie's income from his 80-acre allotment in the Cromwell field is now $1,000 a day. The Mid-Continent Production corporation has completed four wells on the tract that are producing 4,000 barrels a day. Of this the Indian receives an eighth. Sixteen wells may be drilled before the oil is exhausted. Willie is classed as an incompetent, and has a guardian who attends to his business matters.

The Alexander family is one of the luckiest of all families of the Creek tribe. Four brothers are receiving oil royalties from their allotments. The allotments of Sealy, Alex and Roley are in Okmulgee county, and were leased to the Cosden Oil and Refining company, which the Mid-Continent Petroleum corporation succeeded. Willie's allotment was chosen in the Seminole Indian nation. The others are in the Creek nation.

It was Sealy Alexander who recently appeared in court and asked that his guardian be instructed to invest part of his income in farm land that he might go to work and become a useful citizen. It was said this is the first time an incompetent Indian in Oklahoma has made such a request.

The Cromwell pool is spreading over other allotments, and Creek Indian incomes are likely to run between $10,000,000 and $20,000,000 this year. The pool is in a formerly wild section of the Seminole nation that had little value for either agricultural or grazing purposes.

Uncle Sam Burning Up Roofs

The United States bureau of standards at Washington is literally burning up roofs in order to test the fire-resistant qualities of building materials. The photograph shows a small fire in progress as a means of noting what happens when sparks from a chimney fall upon the roof of your home.

British Cross-Word Now Task for Savants

Oxford, England.—The cross-word puzzle craze reached its zenith last month and is now on the wane, according to Oxford librarians. In Oxford, as elsewhere, it more than doubled the sales of dictionaries, and the demands made upon reference libraries were so great that one librarian threatened to shut up shop altogether.

The explanation given for the failure of popular interest is that the later puzzles have become so difficult, through the increased experience of their creators, that no ordinary mortal can conveniently solve them.

Men who during the war had little difficulty in deciphering the secret and confidential codes of both the enemy and the allies have organized "pools of intellect" and settled down seriously to the solution of all possible cross-words.

England's Giant Steel Airship to Carry 100

London.—England's giant airship, the R-101, which is to ply between this country and India, is to be constructed of stainless steel, and is to have two separate decks and accommodations for 100 passengers.

Passengers and crew on the R-101 may smoke pipes, cigars or cigarettes during voyages, as the engines will not use gasoline as fuel, but a heavy gas oil instead, and by this system virtually all danger of fire while in the air will be eliminated. The sleeping quarters will consist of two-bed cabins, similar to steamship berths.

According to the present plans of the builders, who are working in conjunction with the air ministry, the keel of the ship will be laid down in July. The R-101 is to be 720 feet in length and 140 feet in diameter, and is expected to begin flights in 1926.

Girl Bitten by Snake Is Over It in Just One Hour

New York.—Miss Nellie Louis Condon, secretary of the Reptile Study Society of America, was bitten on the right index finger by a large copperhead snake during a hunt by thirty-five members of the society in Rattlesnake den in the Ramapo mountains near Suffren, N. Y. She was treated by the first aid methods and later an antivenom serum was injected into her side repeatedly. Within an hour she apparently had fully recovered.

Let's Get a 92-Scoring Butter!
It is very important to deliver your cream twice a week in order to get a 92-scoring butter.
All our butter is scored and inspected by the Government Inspector and whatever score he places on our butter is the basis on which the Creameries Ass'n makes payment.
Cream a week old will never mak butter scoring 92 even tho it is sweet. Our biggest trouble is with old flavor which shows up in butter a week or so after it is made.
It is very encouraging the way our patrons have realized the necessity of delivering their cream twice a week yet some seem to think that as long as their cream is sweet it will make the highest grade butter.
Co-operate with us and you will get more money for your butterfat. In this way only we will get a 92-scoring butter.

LAND O' LAKES BUTTER IS GOAL OF CREAMERIES

Demand For It Is Growing Fast

All energies of the cooperative creameries of Minnesota are to be centered on the production of Land O'Lakes butter in a supreme effort to fill all orders for this excellent product, the Farm Bureau is informed.

The creameries association feel confident that all cooperative creameries of the State can be brought into the class of Land O'Lakes creameries, a rating given to those producing 50 per cent of 93 score butter, according to A. J. McGuire, general manager. Several creameries now get as high as 90 or 95 per cent of their output into Land O'Lakes.

The demand for this butter is growing so fast on the eastern markets that in order to fill orders a campaign to bring up the quality of all creameries is being made and the farmers are being educated in the methods of producing the kind of cream that will sell their butter under the only brand owned by the farmers of Minnesota--a brand which would not be sold today for a million dollars. Eastern dealers report that customers once using this brand of butter are not satisfied with any other.

EXPORTS

TO CHINA
TO ALL OF SOUTH AMERICA SMALL QUANTITIES OF PREPARED FOODS
PREPARED BY SEARS-ROEBUCK AGRICULTURAL FOUNDATION

Products of the American farm go to every civilized country of the world. Out of the United States each year is sent approximately one-half of the total cotton crop, one-fourth of the yield of the wheat fields, one-fifth of the porkers and huge quantities of corn and tobacco, dried fruits and other products of field and feed lot.

In the United Kingdom more of America's farm exports are consumed than in any other nation. The United Kingdom uses more American cotton than any other country, her annual consumption averaging around 1,580,916 bales. Germany is in the market for almost as much cotton, using 1,011,014 pounds last year. The United Kingdom is the first market for American wheat and flour, tobacco, corn sirup and condensed milk. She also takes large quantities of dried fruits, oil cake, meat, meat products and corn.

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

ON NOT GETTING FLATTERED

"Somehow, Aunt Emmy, it scares me when I read of all the ways people lose their money in fake stock and bond transactions. How can you know who is honest and what stocks and bonds are safe to buy?" queried Jane.

"It is easy enough if people only wouldn't be so impatient," replied Aunt Emmy. "There is never any need for haste in investing. It's far better to take a little time to find out the character of the securities offered and of the person offering them. The buying of securities was greatly stimulated by the Liberty Loans. Before Uncle Sam offered Liberty bonds only about 300,000 people in the United States owned securities. Now millions of people are buying stocks and bonds.

"Of course the unscrupulous security vendors have taken advantage of the public's new education in investments. All sorts of bad and questionable securities are being offered for sale. Naturally the majority of the people are not rich, so when a man sets out to sell bonds or stocks through the country he must be prepared to sell in small quantities. 'Baby bonds,' $100 bonds, that is, are popular. If the baby bonds are sound they are as good an investment as any. But before you buy bonds of any kind get good advice.

"Be especially careful about doorstep salesmen. A bond house that floods the country with salesmen is put to great expense. They can't send salesmen all over the United States for nothing, so when a salesman comes to sell you bonds it is important to investigate the quality of the bond he is selling. Your bank will give information about investment houses and investments, and if you follow the bank's advice you will not lose your money.

"Another thing to be looked upon with suspicion," continued Aunt Emmy, "is the man who tries to sell you securities over the telephone. Such men will call up some woman living in the country and say they are calling at the suggestion of a friend. They suggest that she buy such and such a bond that is selling at such and such a price. They ask the woman to hold the wire a moment, then say the price of the bond has gone up a point. Of course these men always call on the long distance 'phone from some large city. Poor little Mrs. Backwoods is so thrilled at this touch with the great world of finance that she buys the bond, only to find out her error later. It's a safe bet that she wouldn't buy sheets and pillow cases over the 'phone from a perfect stranger, but bonds, yes!"

"I see, Aunty," said Jane, "you should always know whom you're dealing with and not get excited and rush into anything just because it sounds flattering and thrilling."

"Exactly," said Aunt Emmy.—Anne B. Aymes.

ADVOCATE SEED CORN TEST

The Iowa Bankers Association sent out a bulletin to its members urging the bankers to have the farmer test his seed corn this year because of the heavy damage done to corn last year by dry rot. Enclosed was a letter from a farm crops man at Iowa State College explaining the situation. Germination tests on 32,000 ears of representative seed corn from all sections of the state showed that only about 80 per cent were fit for seed purposes, the rest being either weak or dead. "Dry rot is very prevalent in the seed corn this year and is responsible for the low vitality of a good deal of seed corn. In a great many cases ears may look bright and free from disease but kernels from these ears will show the presence of dry rot mold when germinating in the tester."

Bankers Help

The Georgia Bankers Association has appropriated $1,000 a year to be used as a loan fund for boys and girls who are unable to meet the expenses of a college education, but whose work in clubs has demonstrated their qualifications for leadership.

Bradley County, Arkansas, bankers are offering $500 in cash for the best showings in the production of corn in 1924. Four hundred dollars will go to farmers and $100 to boys' clubs.

Ben Docken Acquitted

According to late reports received here, Ben Docken was acquitted of his charge at the recent trial at Warren. He had been indicted on the charge of selling Liberty bonds belonging to residents of Holt left in the Holt State Bank for safe keeping. The face value of the bonds had been paid back after the sale had been detected by the State Banking Department after the bank had been closed.

Chapter XII

In town Dirk lived in a large front room and alcove on the third floor of a handsome old-fashioned three-story-and-basement house. He used the front room as a living room, the alcove as a bedroom. He and Selina had furnished it together, discarding all of the room's original belongings except the bed, a table, and one fat comfortable faded old armchair whose brocade surface hinted a past grandeur. When he had got his books ranged in open shelves along one wall, soft-shaded lamps on table and desk, the place looked more than livable; lived in. During the process of furnishing Selina got into the way of coming into town for a day or two to prowl the auction rooms and the second-hand stores. She had a genius for this sort of thing; hated the spick-and-span varnish and veneer of the new furniture to be got in the regular way.

She enjoyed these rare trips into town; made a holiday of them. Dirk would take her to the theater and she would sit entranced. Strangely enough, considering the lack of what the world calls romance and adventure in her life, she did not like the motion pictures. "All the difference in the world," she would say, "between the movies and the thrill I get out of a play at the theater. My, yes! Like fooling with paper dolls when you could be playing with a real live baby."

The day was marvelously mild for March in Chicago. Spring, usually so coy in this region, had flung herself at them head first. As the massive revolving door of Dirk's office building fanned him into the street he saw Paula in her long low sporting roadster at the curb. She was dressed in black. All feminine fashionable and middle-class Chicago was dressed in black. All feminine fashionable and middle-class America was dressed in black. Two years of war had robbed Paris of its husbands, brothers, sons. All Paris walked in black. America, untouched, gayly borrowed the smart habiliments of mourning and now Michigan boulevard and Fifth avenue walked demurely in the gloom of crepe and chiffon; black hats, black gloves, black slippers. Only black was "good" this year.

Paula smiled up at him, patted the leather seat beside her with one hand that was absurdly thick-fingered in its fur-lined glove.

"It's cold driving. Button up tight. Where'll we stop for your bag?"

He climbed into the seat beside her. Her manipulation of the wheel was witchcraft. The roadster slid in and out of traffic like a fluid thing, an enamel stream, silent as a swift current in a river. When his house was reached, "I'm coming up," she said. "I suppose you haven't any tea?"

"Gosh, no! What do you think I am! A young man in an English novel!"

"Now, don't be provincial and Chicagoish, Dirk." They climbed the three flights of stairs. She looked about. Her glance was not disapproving. "This isn't so bad. Who did it? She did! Very nice. But of course you ought to have your own smart little apartment, with a Jap to do you up. To do that for you, for example."

"Yes," grimly. He was packing his bag—not throwing clothes into it, but folding them deftly, neatly, as the son of a wise mother packs. "My salary'd just about keep him in white linen house-coats."

"I'm going to send you some things for your room, Dirk."

"For God's sake don't!"

"Why not?"

"Two kinds of women in the world. I learned that at college. Those who send men things for their rooms and those that don't."

"You're very rude."

"You asked me. There! I'm all set." He snapped the lock of his bag. "I'm sorry I can't give you anything. I haven't a thing. Not even a glass of wine and a—what is it they say in books?—oh, yeh—a biscuit."

In the roadster again Paula maintained a fierce and steady speed for the remainder of the drive.

"We call the place Stormwood," Paula told him. "And nobody outside the dear family knows how fitting that is. Don't scowl. I'm not going to tell you my marital woes. And don't you say I asked for it. . . . How's the job?"

"Rotten."

"You don't like it? The work?"

"I like it well enough, only—well, you see we leave the university architectural course thinking we're all going to be Stanford Whites or Cass Gilberts, tossing off a Woolworth building and making ourselves famous overnight. I've spent all yesterday and today planning a drygoods box that's going up on the corner of Milwaukee avenue and Ashland, west."

"And ten years from now?"

"Ten years from now maybe they'll let me do the plans for the drygoods box all alone."

"Why don't you drop it?"

He was startled. "Drop it! How do you mean?"

"Chuck it. Do something that will bring you quick results. This isn't an age of waiting. Suppose, twenty years from now, you do plan a grand Gothic office building to grace this new and glorified Michigan boulevard they're always shouting about! You'll be a middle-aged man living in a middle-class house in a middle-class suburb with a middle-class wife."

"Maybe"—slightly nettled.

They turned in at the gates of Stormwood. A final turn of the drive. An avenue of trees. A house, massive, pillared, porticoed. The door opened as they drew up at the entrance. A maid in cap and apron stood in the doorway. A man appeared at the side of the car, coming seemingly from nowhere, greeted Paula civilly and drove the car off. The glow of an open fire in the hall welcomed them. "He'll bring up your bag," said Paula. "How're the babies, Anna? Has Mr. Storm got here?"

"He telephoned, Mrs. Storm. He says he won't be out till late—maybe ten or after. Anyway, you're not to wait dinner."

Paula, from being the limp, expert, fearless driver of the high-powered roadster was now suddenly very much the mistress of the house, quietly observant, giving an order with a lift of the eyebrow or a nod of the head. Would Dirk like to go to his room at once? Dinner at seven-thirty. He needn't dress. Just as he liked. Everything was very informal here. They roughed it. (Dirk had counted thirteen servants by noon next day and hadn't been near the kitchen.)

He decided to bathe and change into dinner clothes and was glad of this when he found Paula in black chiffon before the fire in the great beamed room she had called the library. Dirk thought she looked very beautiful in that diaphanous stuff, with the pearls. Her heart-shaped face, with its large eyes that slanted a little at the corners; her long slim throat; her dark hair piled high and away from her little ears. He decided not to mention it.

Dirk told himself that Paula had known her husband would not be home until ten and had deliberately planned a tete-a-tete meal. He would not, therefore, confess himself a little nettled when Paula said, "I've asked the Emerys in for dinner; and we'll have a game of bridge afterward. Phil Emery, you know, the Third. He used to have it on his visiting card, like royalty."

The Emerys were drygoods; had been drygoods for sixty years; were accounted Chicago aristocracy; preferred England; rode to hounds in pink coats along Chicago's prim and startled suburban prairies. They had a vast estate on the lake near Stormwood. They arrived a trifle late. Dirk had seen pictures of old Phillip Emery ("Phillip the First," he thought, with an inward grin) and decided, looking at the rather anemic third edition, that the stock was running a little thin. The dinner was delicious but surprisingly simple; little more than Selina would have given him, Dirk thought, had he come home to the farm this week-end. The talk was desultory and rather dull. And this chap had millions, Dirk said to himself. Millions. No scratching in an architect's office for this lad.

At bridge after dinner Phillip the Third proved to be sufficiently the son of his father to win from Dirk more money than he could conveniently afford to lose.

Theodore Storm came in at ten and stood watching them. When the guests had left the three sat before the fire. "Something to drink?" Storm asked Dirk. Dirk refused but Storm mixed a stiff highball for himself, and then another. The whisky brought no flush to his large white impassive face. He talked almost not at all. Dirk, naturally silent, was loquacious by comparison. But while there was nothing heavy, unvital about Dirk's silence, this man's was oppressive, irritating. His paunch, his large white hands, his great white face gave the effect of bleached bloodless bulk. "I don't see how she stands him," Dirk thought. Husband and wife seemed to be on terms of polite friendliness. Storm excused himself and took himself off with a word about being tired, and seeing them in the morning.

After he had gone: "He likes you," said Paula.

"Important," said Dirk, "if true."

"But it is important. He can help you a lot."

"Help me how? I don't want—"

"But I do. I want you to be successful. I want you to be. You can be. You've got it written all over you. In the way you stand, and talk, and don't talk. In the way you look at people. In something in the way you carry yourself. It's what they call force, I suppose. Anyway, you've got it."

"Has your husband got it?"

"Theodore! No! That is—"

"There you are. I've got the force, but he's got the money."

"You can have both." She was leaning forward. Her eyes were bright, enormous. Her hands—those thin dark hot hands—were twisted in her lap. He looked at her quietly. Suddenly there were tears in her eyes. "Don't look at me that way, Dirk." She huddled back in her chair, limp. She looked a little haggard and older, somehow. "My marriage is a mess, of course. You can see that."

"You knew it would be, didn't you?"

"No. Yes. Oh, I don't know. Anyway, what's the difference, now? I'm not trying to be what they call an Influence in your life. I'm just fond of you—you know that—and I want you to be great and successful. It's maternal, I suppose."

"I should think two babies would satisfy that urge."

"Oh, I can't get excited about two pink healthy lumps of babies. I love them and all that, but all they need is to have a bottle stuffed into their mouths at proper intervals and to be bathed, and dressed and aired and slept. It's a mechanical routine and about as exciting as a treadmill."

"Just what do you want me to do, Paula?"

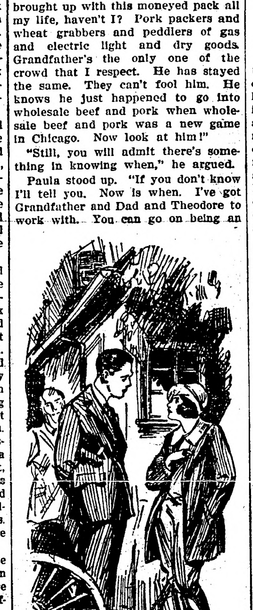
She was eager again, vitally concerned in him. "It's all so ridiculous. All these men whose incomes are thirty—forty—sixty—a hundred thousand a year usually haven't any qualities, really, that the five-thousand-a-year man hasn't. Somebody has to get the fifty-thousand-dollar salaries—some advertising man, or bond salesman or—why, look at Phil Emery! He probably couldn't sell a yard of pink ribbon to a schoolgirl if he had to. Look at Theodore! He just sits and blinks and says nothing. But when the time comes he doubles up his fat white fist and mumbles, 'Ten million,' or 'Fifteen million,' and that settles it."

Dirk laughed to hide his own little mounting sensation of excitement. "It isn't quite as simple as that, I imagine. There's more to it than meets the eye."

"There isn't! I tell you I know the whole crowd of them. I've been brought up with this moneyed pack all my life, haven't I? Pork packers and wheat grabbers and peddlers of gas and electric light and dry goods. Grandfather's the only one of the crowd that I respect. He has stayed the same. They can't fool him. He knows he just happened to go into wholesale beef and pork when wholesale beef and pork was a new game in Chicago. Now look at him!"

"Still, you will admit there's something in knowing when," he argued.

Paula stood up. "If you don't know I'll tell you. Now is when. I've got Grandfather and Dad and Theodore to work with. You can go on being an architect if you want to. It's a fine enough profession. But unless you're a genius where'll it get you! Go in with them, and Dirk, in five years—"



"I Used to Ride the Old Nags, Bareback, on the Farm."

"What!" They were both standing, facing each other, she tense, eager; he relaxed but stimulated.

"Try it and see what, will you? Will you, Dirk?"

"I don't know, Paula. I should say, my mother wouldn't think much of it."

"What does she know! Oh, I don't mean that she isn't a fine, wonderful person. She is. I love her. But success! She thinks success is another acre of asparagus or cabbage; or a new stove in the kitchen now that they've brought gas out as far as High Prairie."

He had a feeling that she possessed him; that her hot eager hands held him though they stood apart and eyed each other almost hostilely.

As he undressed that night he thought, "Now what's her game? What's she up to? Be careful, Dirk, old boy."

As he lay in the soft bed with the satin coverlet over him he thought, "Now what's her little game!"

He awoke at eight, enormously hungry. He wondered, uneasily, just how he was going to get his breakfast. She had said his breakfast would be brought him in his room. He stretched luxuriously, sprang up, turned on his bath water, bathed. When he emerged in dressing gown and slippers his breakfast tray had been brought him mysteriously and its contents lay appetizingly on a little portable table. There were flocks of small covered dishes and a charming individual coffee service. A little note from Paula: "Would you like to take walk at about half-past nine? Stroll down to the stables. I want to show you my new horse."

The distance from the house to the stables was actually quite a brisk little walk in itself. Paula, in riding clothes, was waiting for him.

She greeted him. "I've been out two hours. Had my ride. You ride, don't you?"

"You'll have to learn. Then I'll have some one to ride with me. Theodore never rides. He never takes any sort of exercise. Sits in that great fat car of his."

They went into the coach house, a great airy white-washed place with glittering harness and spurs and bridles like jewels in glass cases. It gave Dirk a little hopeless feeling. He had never before seen anything like it.

Something had annoyed him, she saw. Would he wait while she changed to walking things? Or perhaps he'd rather drive in the roadster. They walked up to the house together. He wished that she would not consult his wishes so anxiously. It made him sulky, impatient.

She put a hand on his arm. "Dirk, are you annoyed at me for what I said last night?"

"No."

"What did you think when you went to your room last night? Tell me. What did you think?"

"I thought: 'She's bored with her husband and she's trying to vamp me. I'll have to be careful.'"

Paula laughed delightedly. "That's nice and frank . . . What else?"

"I thought my coat didn't fit very well and I wished I could afford to have Peel make my next one."

"You can," said Paula.

Chapter XIII

As it turned out, Dirk was spared the necessity of worrying about the fit of his next dinner coat for the following year and a half. His coat, during that period, was a neat olive drab as was that of some millions of young men of his age, or thereabouts. Most of that time he spent at Fort Sheridan, first as an officer in training, then as an officer training others to be officers. He was excellent at this job. Influence put him there and kept him there even after he began to chafe at the restraint.

In the last six months of it (though he did not, of course, know that it was to be the last six months) Dirk tried desperately to get to France. He was suddenly sick of the neat job at home; of the dinners; of the smug routine; of the olive-drab motor car that whisked him wherever he wanted to go (he had a captaincy); of making them "snap into it"; of Paula; of his mother, even. Two months before the war's close he succeeded in getting over; but Paris was his headquarters.

"If I were a man," Selina said, "I'd make up my mind straight about this war and then I'd do one of two things. I'd go into it the way Jan Snip goes at forking the manure pile—a dirty job that's got to be cleaned up; or I'd refuse to do it altogether if I didn't believe in it as a job for me. I'd fight, or I'd be a conscientious objector. There's nothing in between for any one who isn't old or crippled, or sick."

Paula was aghast when she heard this. So was Julie whose wailings had been loud when Eugene had gone into the air service. He was in France now, thoroughly happy. "Do you mean," demanded Paula, "that you actually want Dirk to go over there and be wounded or killed!"

"No. If Dirk were killed my life would stop. I'd go on living, I suppose, but my life would have stopped."

They all were doing some share in the work to be done.

Selina had thought about her own place in this war welter. She had wanted to do canteen work in France but had decided against this as being selfish. "The thing for me to do," she said, "is to go on raising vegetables and hogs as fast as I can." She supplied countless households with free food while their men were gone. She herself worked like a man, taking the place of the able-bodied helper who had been employed on her farm.

Paula was lovely in her Red Cross uniform. She persuaded Dirk to go into the Liberty bond selling drive and he was unexpectedly effective in his quiet, serious way; most convincing and undeniably thrilling to look at in uniform. Paula's little air of possession had grown until now it enveloped him. She wasn't playing now; was deeply and terribly in love with him.

Cost of "Lifting" Oil

The bureau of mines says that from 20 to 90 per cent of the total cost of producing petroleum may be charged to lifting the oil. Although the lifting cost ranges from less than three cents a barrel at flowing wells, producing several hundred barrels a day, to $3 a barrel, at wells producing less than a fifth of a barrel a day, the lifting cost per well may range from more than $1,000 at large flowing wells of the type recently discovered in Oklahoma, Texas, Arkansas and California, to less than $10 at many of the old wells pumped only a few hours a week, as in most of the oil fields of New York and Pennsylvania, where the average daily production per well per day is less than one-fourth of a barrel.

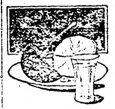
HINTS AND DISCOVERIES

If members of the family are fond of it, serve half a grapefruit for dessert with an after dinner mint in the center of each.



When serving toast and egg to a child or to an invalid, place the egg well poached on the soft toast that has been buttered and cut into cubes, keeping the shape of the slice undisturbed. It is so easy to handle with spoon or fork.

Drop the egg into a muffin ring in the water when poaching; it will be shapely when removed and may be placed on a round of buttered toast.

Season mashed potatoes, for a change, with onion juice—one teaspoonful—and one-fourth teaspoonful of nutmeg to each quart of seasoned potato.

When making cookies or doughnuts using sour cream or milk, mix them up the night before and set them on ice. They will roll out with less flour, and will keep moist much longer.

After cooking carrots until tender, put them through a ricer, season and beat as one does mashed potatoes. Those who do not like carrots will enjoy these. For variety add a dash of nutmeg and a little lemon juice.

A small line on the porch for hanging small things will be a great step-saver; use the doll clothespins instead of the usual ones.

When sending handkerchiefs to the laundry, sew a corner of each to a strip of tape; they will all come home together.

Clothes that need to be ironed at once should be sprinkled with hot water.

When re-covering your ironing board use two thicknesses of cotton batting if you lack an old blanket to pad it.

Two or three new clean bushel baskets will be as useful for laundry baskets as the more expensive ones and they are much lighter to carry.

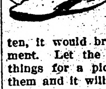
Meals in the Open.

With the auto at the door of nearly every family, meals out of doors are so much enjoyed that the work of packing a basket for the family is little compared to the enjoyment it gives. If tired mothers would do this more often, it would bring rest and refreshment. Let the children help; doing things for a picnic will be play for them and it will teach them responsibility and helpfulness. More children and husbands, too, are spoiled by too much waiting on; take a little for yourself, before a breakdown comes.



If there are dishes to be washed, let the family take them to the brook or lake and wash and dry them. Now, with such a variety of paper dishes, one need carry very few heavy dishes. A small bonfire will dispose of all rubbish and leave everything tidy for the next picnic party. Of course, a true sportsman pours water over a fire even if it seems well burned down; that is the only safe way to leave a fire—entirely extinguished.

For the meal, it may be just as simple as one desires, or as elaborate. Roast potatoes and frankforts are wholesome and hearty and not hard for a novice to prepare. Beefsteak is delicious, broiled over a wire broiler or cooked on a camping stove.

Scrambled eggs need a frying pan, hot sandwiches may be toasted on the sheet iron, hamburg steaks may be fried, and any number of things cooked on it, besides making a place to cook coffee.

Fresh salad prepared at home and carried in sealed jars, is always a welcome addition to any outdoor meal.

Thermos bottles are another great convenience; they will carry either hot or cold drinks.

The real fun of an outdoor meal is having the fire and doing the cooking over it.

Green peas, cooked and seasoned with cream, carried in a sealed jar, will always be eaten to the last pea. Green onions with plain bread and butter, with the peas, will make a good meal.

Sandwiches should never be lacking. As there are countless fillings for sandwiches one may have anything desired. Brown bread, chopped green pepper with onion filling, makes a fine sandwich. Fresh cucumbers sliced and dipped into French dressing makes another tasty filling. Sweet sandwiches are good for the little folks and take the place of cake. Use jam, jelly, maple sugar, and cream with a few chopped nuts. One will find any supplies of fruit or vegetables, meats and nuts, combine to make good fillings.

Forest City, Iowa.—"My first child lived only a short time and I was sick for a year after. When I bent over and raised myself up again I could almost scream with pain in my back. One day I was so bad that I had to leave my washing and get ready to go to the doctor. He gave me medicine but it did no more good than if I drank just water. Once when we had been in town a little book telling about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was left in our car. I have taken five bottles of the Vegetable Compound now and I do all my housework and help with the milking and taking care of chickens and garden. Industries Unite to Save Forests

Board Is Named to Avert Lumber Waste.

Washington.—A nation-wide movement to conserve the lumber resources of the United States was started by the appointment of a conservation committee, of which Secretary Hoover has agreed to act as chairman. The committee is to make a thorough study of the wood-using industries and report at a conference to be held next fall. One of the big objects sought is to obtain closer co-operation in insuring full use of all timber cut.

The committee comprises representatives of the railways, the paper and pulp industry, purchasing agents of the country, wood-using industries, lumber manufacturers and retailers, architects and contractors, the American Engineering council and the national farmer organizations.

A preliminary conference, called by Secretary Hoover, has been in session here for some time and it was voted that definite action to bring about conservation was essential to the best interests of the nation. At the close of the conference the situation was summed up by John V. W. Reynders of New York, who represented the American Engineering council.

"The United States," he said, "has been living in a fool's paradise. Foreign governments are studying economics, and unless we take the same step economy measures will be forced upon us. Industry must look at such problems from a national standpoint."

Voluntary Action.

Secretary Hoover explained what the Department of Commerce had been developing during the last three years with industry to eliminate waste. It has been found possible, he said, to obtain practical results by voluntary action, the function of the government being to bring together the industries that they might unite for such action as would serve the common interest.

Secretary Hoover said the fact that timber was being cut at a rate four times faster than it was being replaced, called for immediate and constructive action. The problem for the committee, he added, dealt with the problems for economy of use after the forest had become a commercial product.

Announcement was made by Mr. Hoover that an anonymous gift of $25,000 a year for two years had been received, to serve as the nucleus for financing the investigations which the committee will undertake. He recommended that the program of the committee take the form of day-to-day operations, with studies being made of specific industries to ascertain the full facts, and then to be considered from the standpoint of their relation with other industries, to the end that the by-products of one industry might be utilized wherever possible by another.

One of the faulty functions of the present-day commercial and industrial fabric, Secretary Hoover contended, was that industries had not been brought together to co-operate in the national interest. Such co-operation, he said, would not only bring economy of operation of industry, but would result in a more efficient use of raw materials.

Paper Industry.

A report on behalf of the American Paper and Pulp association was made by Norman W. Wilson, president of that organization. He said the paper and pulp industry was tackling the problem from two ends. More and more mills were employing foresters to secure expert treatment of the timber and to reproduce their wood supplies, he said. At the finishing end of the industry increasing attention was being given to research for new uses for by-products.

Hugh P. Baker of New York, secretary of the same organization, said that while the paper and pulp industry consumed 6,000,000 cords of wood annually, this was but 4 per cent of the timber cut in the United States. The value of paper products and paper goods is about $24,000,000,000.

The industry, he said, has two problems, one technical and the other commercial. In the technical field decay of wood and utilization of decayed woods has been combated by the forest products laboratory. Hardwoods were being used with success where they were not formerly usable and where a decade ago foresters regarded the hardwood trees as a nuisance.

Howard Andrews of Nashville, representing the National Association of Railroad Tie Producers, said that through the use of wood preservative the industry already had reduced the replacement of ties from a rate of 325 per mile in 1920 to 90 per mile in 1924.

Col. W. B. Greely of the federal forest service, who will act as vice chairman of the new conservation committee, argued for the establishment of some sort of clearing house and guiding agency to aid in the conservation desired.

Heligoland Fort Razed by Blasts

Arsenal Destroyed in Keeping With Peace Terms.

Heligoland.—Inhabitants of this little wind-swept island which has been converted from the status of a fortress and submarine base to that of a peaceful district of fisher folk who follow entertainment of summer visitors as a side line, have been wondering of late how the great change which has taken place here is going to affect their business.

The outer entrance to the harbor has been completely blocked, as part of the scheme of dismantlement, and rendered useless for all but fishing smacks and small pleasure boats bringing summer tourists from the continent.

The work of demolition, carried out under the peace terms by the inter-allied commission of control, is said to be the largest task of this kind ever attempted, and with the blocking of the harbor entrance against warships of all kinds the job has been brought to a conclusion.

While this work was in progress great numbers of visitors arrived from spring until fall to witness the different phases of transmission but with the blasting away of the fortifications at an end, the great guns taken down and melted into peace time implements, the inhabitants feel the public generally will lose interest in this one-time island arsenal which the Germans took 24 years to equip at a cost of approximately $85,000,000.

Nearly 200,000 cubic yards of concrete and brick work was demolished in the harbor works, 60,000 feet of drilling was carried out and about 300,000 pounds of explosives used in the operations. Demolition of the fortifications was accompanied by cutting up the numerous guns by means of oxy-acetylene and oxy-hydrogen flame, by the burning of holes in the gun turrets as a preliminary to breaking them up by explosives, by drilling and blasting and removal of the concrete gun emplacements, and the destruction of extensive underground chambers which served as an enormous storehouse and where the German gunners lived.

The terms of peace stipulated that the work should be done at the cost of the German government by the aid of German labor. Now that this has all been done the inhabitants say they feel much more happy and contented.

Canada Holds $14,000,000 Seized German Property

Ottawa.—Cash and Victory bonds totaling $14,000,000 are in the hands of Secretary of State Copp, as the proceeds of property and securities seized from German subjects in Canada during the war.

Additional property of an approximate value of $14,000,000 remains to be obtained. Of the sum already realized, $5,000,000 was from sale to New York brokers of 37,500 shares of Canadian Pacific railway stock.

Disposition of the proceeds will be determined by parliament. They probably will be used in payment of Canadian indemnity claims.

Monetary Pledge of Centuries Ago

An archeological expedition sent out by the University of Pennsylvania dug up a clay tablet in the ruins of the ancient city of Nippur, Babylon, with an inscription upon it which, translated, reads as follows:

"Thirty bushels of dates are due to Bel Nadin Shun, son of Marashu, by Bel Bullitsu and Sha Nabu Shu, sons of Kirebti, and their tenants. In the month of Tashrit (harvest month) of the thirty-fourth year of King Artaxerxes I, they shall pay the dates, thirty bushels, according to the measure of Bel Nadin Shun, in the town of Bit Balatsu. Their field, cultivated and uncultivated, their fief estate, is held as a pledge for the dates, namely, thirty bushels, by Bel Nadin Shun. Another creditor shall not have power over it."

This tablet was dated 430 B. C., or nearly 2,400 years ago. It may not be the oldest record extant of a mortgage, but it illustrates very clearly that the mortgage was an accepted form of investment some 2,000 years ago.—Donald Rea Hanson in Forum.

Red Herring Across Trail

This phrase, originally "to draw a red herring across the track," is frequently heard in everyday speech to signify a means used to divert one's attention, to throw one off the scent by injecting into the matter in hand a new object upon which the attention is then focused.

The expression dates back to the Seventeenth century for its origin, being a survival of the old practice of sportsmen to draw the carcass of a cat or fox or a red herring across the track in training dogs for hunting.

The uniqueness of the phrase made it stand out, and it soon became popular in the figurative sense in which it is used today.—Jean Newton in Chicago Journal.

Buying Art Works

It is not surprising that an occasional protest appears against the sales of English works of art to Americans when it is realized how many of the treasures of the Old World find their way across the Atlantic. During the last two years the sales of works of art to American purchasers in London have reached the huge sum of $10,000,000 annually. It is a compliment to American taste in art that the demand seems to be increasing, and it is usually an American bidder who has the last word before the fall of the hammer.

Duchess' Fad a Boon

Because the popular English duchess of York has a fad for hand-painted slippers and similar evening wearing apparel, budding, but needy artists of the European centers have suddenly found odd jobs that are a boon to them. The fad has become popular in London and Paris and as real artists were necessary to give this final touch the shops selling or making these accessories had to call upon the students and mature artists.

Asking the Impossible

Betty and Petey had been playing hard all day and were worn out when evening came. They were nearly at "swords' points" when Betty said a few cross words that "broke the camel's back."

"Betty," said Petey very much put out. "Can't you be a li'l gentleman?"

Betty stopped, put her finger into her mouth and from then on played by herself.

A Fatal Accident

What proved to be a fatal accident occurred at the Sandberg farm home last Friday. While Mr. Sandberg, the owner, was caring for his stock he was closely followed by his friend Thomas. During the walk Tom got too close to the rear end of the cow who kicked violently, striking Tom in the pit of the stomach. He soon became sick, showing signs of a bad internal rupture. Everything possible was done to relieve the pains and trouble but of no avail and Sunday evening he passed away in the presence of two sorrowing friends. He leaves to mourn his passing, Babe and Irene.—Crygla Eagle.

Let's Get a 92-Scoring Butter!

It is very important to deliver your cream twice a week in order to get a 92-scoring butter.

All our butter is scored and inspected by the Government Inspector and whatever score he places on our butter is the basis on which the Creameries Ass'n makes payment. Cream a week old will never make butter scoring 92 even tho it is sweet. Our biggest trouble is with old flavor which shows up in butter a week or so after it is made.

It is very encouraging the way our patrons have realized the necessity of delivering their cream twice a week yet some seem to think that as long as their cream is sweet it will make the highest grade butter.

Co-operate with us and you will get more money for your butterfat. In this way only we will get a 92-scoring butter.

STORM TOLL IS REPORTED HIGH

Restoration Of Communication Boosts Damage Estimate To $1,000,000.

Fargo, N. D.—Gradual restoration of communication with Minnesota, North and South Dakota municipalities, isolated by severe wind, rain, hail and dust storms Friday, brought in additional reports of the storm's toll Saturday night, increasing the estimated damage toll to nearly $1,000,000.

As an aftermath of Friday's record breaking May temperatures, which in many sections reached 100 above zero, and the severe wind storms in the central and western part of Minnesota, the temperature started dropping Saturday afternoon and in St. Paul at 4 p. m., a temperature of 50 degrees above zero was reported—a drop of 47 degrees in the 24-hour period.

Sauk Center reported by mail Saturday morning that scores of farm buildings in that vicinity had been razed.

Widespread damage was done from St. Cloud through central Minnesota to Fergus Falls and on into points east of Huron, S. D., and as far north as North Dakota.

Fergus Falls reported a score of barns were blown down in Ottertail county in widely separated localities. Earlier in the day reports were received from Stearns, Swift, Pope, Douglas, Kandiyohi, and Todd counties of reported similar conditions.

While hail was reported in several of the storm swept communities, farm men of the Twin Cities were of the opinion that it would not be greatly damaging to grains. The rain, they said, would be extremely beneficial in most communities.

Five persons were reported injured, none serious, near Willmar.

Great Northern train No. 13 reached Wahpeton, N. D., four hours late Friday with the car windows broken and the passengers soaking wet.

10,000 HOMELESS IN JAPAN

Disaster Was Predicted by Seismologists Two Years Ago.

San Francisco.—Prophecies of seismologists came true Saturday when an earthquake rocked southwestern Japan, cabled dispatches telling of the destruction of the homes of 10,000 people and the killing of 200 or more.

No foreigners were reported as among the casualties.

After the Tokyo-Yokohama earthquake of nearly two years ago, it was foretold that some time in the near future a tremor would visit the southwest. The center of the disturbance, however, dodged the populaced district around Osaka, centering in the Tajima district, 80 miles to the northwest.

News dispatches showed that relief measures were being concentrated on Toyo-Oka, little town of 7,700 in the Tajima district. It was stated that the railroad to the coast and on to Tottori, the nearest large town, had been reopened, after the caving-in of a tunnel between Knosuki and Takeno had blocked the rail exit to the Japan sea. Water transportation was still available, however. Cables failed to state whether the rail line between Toyo-Oka and Kyoto, a run of 93 miles, was in order.

16 LIFE GUARDS LOSE LIVES

Gale Raging Along Coast of Brittany Claims 27 Lives.

Quimper, France.—A great gale raged along the coast of Brittany took toll of at least 27 lives Saturday.

Two small sailing vessels were in distress off Kerity and Penmarch, and life saving boats put out to the rescue. An hour later both life boats were found dashed almost to pieces on the rocks off Penmarch, with 15 of the 16 life savers dead, their bodies still strapped to the seats. They had perished in their gallant attempt to rescue the men on the ships.

The two vessels battled with the waves for a long time, but eventually both were swept upon the great rocks guarding the coast, and 12 men of the crews perished. Hundreds of the coast folk watched their struggles, but without power to aid them.

It was about 2 p. m. when the fishing vessels, caught in the gale, found themselves unable to reach shelter and signalled for help.

The life boats came within a few cable lengths of the vessel and the boatmen were making ready to throw out grappling irons and ropes, when a huge wave lifted the boats out of the churning sea and capsized them. The vessels and life boats were then swept into the rocks.

Grand Forks, N. D.—Grand Forks high school won the sweepstakes award in the interscholastic meet which closed Saturday with 73.5 points after 3 days of competition among 900 pupils from over 100 high schools. The local school made all of its points in music, declamation and athletics, the majority being won by the musicians. This makes the second time in four years that the school has captured the prize.

TURKEY THREATENS MOSUL

Kemal Maintains Big Army as Guaranty Against Decision.

Constantinople — The Mosul frontier dispute between Irak and Turkey again is delicate. The League of Nations announcement that it is postponing a decision on the question until September may postpone a conflict between Turkey and Great Britain, but it has not put Angora into a better spirit.

Turkey is convinced that a powerful army will be the best guarantee for getting justice. Mustapha Kemal Pasha, president of the Turkish republic, has decided not to demobilize any of the 200,000 men now under arms until the Mosul question is settled, although the heavy financial burden of keeping this force ready will be a great economic loss for the country.

THRONGS TEST ONTARIO BEER

Windsor's Inns and Hotel Supply 300,000 Glasses by 7 o'Clock.

Windsor, Ont.—The smiling hundreds who stormed the "four by four" beer citadels in Windsor's inns and hotels during the day, impelled by curiosity and a Volsteadian thirst, were converted into milling thousands with the advent of throngs of Detroiters released from offices and factories.

As the crowds grew the attitude of many of those seeking refreshment changed from the ovial spirit of the early "taster" to one of concern and even anger when several hotel managers were forced to announce that the drinking must cease until a new supply could be brought in from the breweries.

The ferries were crowded and jammed from early evening on with prospective beer drinkers.

STORMS BREAK RECORD HEAT

Miles of Telephone and Telegraph Poles Are Down—Wide Area Hit.

Minneapolis—A record heat wave throughout the northwest which brought to Minneapolis the highest temperature ever recorded in May, 99 degrees above zero, was followed by terrific windstorms which severed all communication with western sections of the state and caused heavy property losses.

The storm, however, brought appreciable relief from the record temperatures.

Deal, England—The death here of the Earl of Ypres, who as Field Marshal Sir John French was a British world-war figure, came at a time when his great reputation was somewhat under a cloud and while controversy raged over his military strategy in France. The earl, who was 73 years old, had been ill since March 19, when he underwent an operation for appendicitis in a private hospital in London.

The controversy concerning the Earl of Ypres has been before the British public particularly since he published his book on the war entitled, "1914," which contained much outspoken and adverse criticism of his subordinates and some French generals, and which did not except Lord Kitchener. The argument has been especially bitter concerning the battle of Le Chateau and General Smith-Dorrien's part in that battle.

Wells—The state banking commission has granted Theodore Aune of Glenwood, Minn., and a group of business men a charter for the Security State Bank to be opened here shortly. The bank will be incorporated for $25,000 and will have a surplus of $5,000.

Elk River — Frank Bedoch, farmer, living near Elk River, was released from Stearns county jail, when the Sherburne county grand jury returned a "no bill." Bedoch was arrested and charged with a second degree manslaughter. Five children of Bedoch were found at the Bedoch home near here, after a spectacular fire had destroyed the home. All were dead.

Mankato—Dentists of southern Minnesota, members of the Southern Minnesota District Dental Society, will meet here June 18, 19 and 20 for their twelfth annual convention. Among the speakers will be Governor Christianson. More than 300 dentists of this territory are expected to attend the convention.

Austin—As an expression of its approval of the veto of Governor Christianson of the socalled emergency appropriation which would have sustained the work of testing cattle for tuberculosis, the Mower County Farm Bureau has withdrawn an invitation extended to the governor to address the annual county picnic in June.

Duluth—The Duluth city council declined to share with the Wisconsin highway commission in the building of a bridge across the St. Louis river at Grassy Point. Insufficient funds were given as the reason. Duluth's share of the cost was estimated at $250,000 exclusive of the approach.

Minneapolis—Preparations for the commencement exercises and festivities which will mark the graduation of thousands of boys and girls in Minnesota's colleges and academies are under way, with many of the institutions turning out the largest class in their history.

The SANDMAN STORY

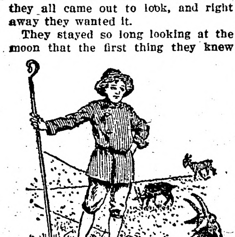
WAYNNE IN DWARFLAND

IN A far-off land, inside a high mountain, there once was a country of the dwarfs. There they had a big diamond-like stone fixed in a big rocky sky for their sun and a pearl for their moon.

Little twinkly jewels were their stars, which were scattered all over the rocky sky. You see, this land of the dwarfs was so hidden from the big sky outside that they had to make a sky of the overhanging rocks.

But one night a dwarf crept out from this rocky country and happened to look up and see our moon, and he told the other dwarfs about it and they all came out to look, and right away they wanted it.

They stayed so long looking at the moon that the first thing they knew there was a beautiful big golden sun in the sky, handsomer than theirs, and they wanted that, too.



Waynne, a Poor Shepherd Boy, Watching His Goats.

Now there lived not far away from the home of the dwarfs a lovely little princess named Alfrida, and one day she wanted a butterfly that flew through the palace garden, and ran away from her nurse trying to catch it.

She ran so far away that she reached the land of the dwarfs, and because they had never seen so beautiful a creature as the princess they wanted to have her live with them.

It was such a strange place that Princess Alfrida soon forgot her own home and began to amuse herself looking at the big stone they called the sun and all the other queer sights.

After a while she told the dwarfs that she wanted the sun to play with, just as they had wanted the real sun they had seen, and because they did not give it to her she began to cry.

At the foot of the mountain was a poor shepherd boy watching his goats. His name was Waynne, and he was very poor. A little hut and his goats were the only things he owned.

The little men quickly surrounded Waynne and began to pull his clothes, trying to drag him with them; but though there were many of the dwarfs Waynne was big and strong.

"What do you want?" he asked.

"Listen," answered the dwarfs.

Waynne listened and heard the screams of the runaway princess who was crying for the sun of dwarfland.

Inside the rocky home of the dwarfs he found the princess still screaming.

The princess was so surprised that she stopped crying.

"Are you the king's daughter?" asked Waynne. "Your father's servants are looking everywhere for you. Come, I will take you home at once." And before the princess could say any more Waynne picked her up and placed her on his shoulder and ran down the mountain.

When he arrived at the palace the king and queen ran to meet him.

"What shall we give you to reward you for finding our child?" asked the king. "You shall be made rich and given a palace if you wish it."

But Waynne said no, he did not wish for a palace. "I will ask for the mountain yonder where I found the princess as my reward. It belongs to your kingdom and if you care to reward me give me the mountain and the land around it a mile in width."

It did not take the king long to write the deed of gift and Waynne thanked him and departed.

The dwarfs were willing to do anything for Waynne that he asked, and when he told them they could live there and have the big sun and moon they had seen in the big sky outside their land, they willingly let Waynne take out all the gold he found and precious stones.

Of course Waynne became a rich man and he took care of the dwarfs as long as they lived, but he was never able to learn where they came from.

To the king and queen Waynne gave the largest of the jewels for their crowns and to Princess Alfrida he gave the very moon she had cried for. Which goes to show that sometimes those who cry for things do get them in the end; but it would not be a good plan to cry too long so you had better not try it.

Your Health

By Andrew F. Currier, M. D.

SCABIES

THE skin disease caused by the itch mite, like certain other parasitic diseases, is especially prevalent in time of war and among soldiers.

It is not only contagious; it is inflammatory, and accompanied by very annoying itching, which is worse at night when one is in bed.

There are cases in which there is no itching, but this is not the rule.

The eruption is located, in the majority of cases, between the fingers and on the anterior or palmar surface of the wrists and elbows.

But it is not limited to these locations and may be present in the armpits, the groins, the legs, and other portions of the body.

The eruption takes the form of blisters or vesicles. The parasite secretes a substance which irritates the skin and provokes scratching.

This intensifies the eruption which may become pustular and present the appearance of urticaria, or eczema, together with a quantity of crusts or scabs.

Thickening of the nails and loss of hair may result from the irritation of the eruption when the matrix of the nails or the hair follicles are involved.

Both male and female itch mites or acari are to be found in this disease, the females being the larger and more numerous.

The male acarus lives under the scales of the outer layer of the skin. The female burrows deeply into this outer layer, her course being indicated by a distinct scratch mark.

In the burrow she lives and lays her eggs from 6 to 30 in number, her duration of life being two to three months.

A few days after the eggs are laid she dies, the eggs mature, the larvae come to the surface; become sexually active; the females are impregnated, burrow, lay their eggs, and die like their predecessors, thus carrying out the round of life.

It is not difficult to get rid of this parasite, for sulphur is a deadly poison to it.

This may be used in the form of an ointment, a soap, or a vapor bath. A single thorough sulphur bath is usually curative; if not it should be repeated.

Other substances which are also destructive are tincture of benzoin, betanaphthol, tobacco, soap, and menthol.

Zinc and its different preparations are of no particular value in this disease; they are not sufficiently parasiticidal.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

THE EVIL EYE

A GREAT many people believe, or half believe, that to watch a friend out of sight when he departs on a journey brings him bad luck. This is merely a phase of the superstition of the evil eye—a precautionary measure. For you may have the evil eye and not be aware of it, and so cast a malign spell upon your friend without wishing to.

Plutarch, writing in the first century, says that relatives and fathers sometimes cast a spell on their own children without knowing it.

In fact this appears to be the opinion of all the old writers on the evil eye. And starting out upon a journey, or any sort of an expedition, has always been looked upon as a time when the evil eye was particularly liable to get in its malevolent work. Also there is no knowing how far the influence of the evil eye will carry. Nicolo Valletta of Naples, a firm believer in the evil eye, offered, in 1787, a reward of ten scudi for a satisfactory answer to this question—and twelve others—concerning the "jettatma", as the Italians call it. So you will see that you can't be too careful. If, perchance, you have the evil eye let your friend get away from its influence before he is fairly set out on his journey—don't follow him up with your glance. As to the superstition of the evil eye in general it has a whole literature of its own—ancient and modern.

"WHAT'S IN A NAME?"

By MILDRED MARSHALL

Facts about your name; its history; meaning; whence it was derived; significance; your lucky day and lucky jewel

JACQUELINE

THE most piquant name in the lexicon of feminine appellatives is Jacqueline. Her origin dates far back in Biblical days when one of the twin sons of Isaac and Rebecca was called Jacob and the mother predicted that he would supplant the other. Thus his name came to signify "the supplanter" and Jacqueline, which is derived from this source, has same significance.

As the derivatives of Jacob spread throughout Europe, France adopted Jacques. The great church of St. Jacques at Liege spread the love of the name in Flanders and it was when the English and French were mingled together in the camps of the Black Prince and Henry V that the name spread into England.

The feminine Jacqueline had already arisen. Henry V called the wild Jacqueline of Hainault, Dame Jack. She, like his Flemish sister-in-law, Jacquette of Luxemburg, was named in honor of the saint of Liege. The nurse of Edward VI, whom Holbein drew by the soubriquet of Mother Jack, was called Jacquette. Jacquelines in France are very numerous and the name is extremely popular in this country where its ready diminutive, Jack, sounds good to Yankee ears.

Jade is Jacqueline's talismanic stone. It is said to bring her all-around good luck and wearing it she will find her heart's desire. Friday is her lucky day and 3 her lucky number.

PLENTY OF ROOM

There's plenty of room below.
Indeed wherever you chance to stop
There's plenty of room, you know.

Plenty of room for goodly cheer,

Wherever the legions of Love abide
There's never a lack of room.

DAIRY FACTS

SURFACE COOLER IS BEST FOR COOLING

Prompt cooling to 50 degrees Fahrenheit is absolutely essential for producing milk of low bacteria count, warns F. C. Button, professor of dairying at the New Jersey College of Agriculture in New Brunswick.

The quickest and therefore best way of cooling milk is to run it over a surface cooler. On such a cooler the milk passes over the outside surface in a thin layer. Cold water is circulated through the inside and thus chills the milk. By this means the temperature of the milk can be brought within two or three degrees of the temperature of the water. Ice water will be needed in hot weather to bring milk to 50 degrees Fahrenheit.

Morning's milk should be cooled to at least 50 degrees Fahrenheit. Night's milk may, however, be cooled within two or three degrees of the temperature of spring or well water, since it is afterward placed in the cooling tank where further chilling can take place. The water in this vat should not be above 45 degrees.

After milk has been cooled by a surface cooler it can be held at 50 degrees Fahrenheit by placing in the vat two to two and a half pounds of ice for every gallon of milk. If the milk is not pre-cooled before being placed in the vat, four pounds or more of ice are needed to cool each gallon of milk. This pre-cooling will cut in half the amount of ice required in the tank.

The use of small-top milk pails and clean, sterilized utensils, and the milking of clean, healthy cows help to keep bacteria out of milk. Some always get in, however, and unless the milk is cooled quickly they multiply rapidly. In warm milk bacteria double their number every half-hour. At 50 degrees they reproduce very slowly.

Cows Swallow All Sorts of Dangerous Objects

Cows swallow all sorts of strange things, including clothes off the fence, rags, bones, leather, crockery, bits of metal, pebbles, bark, wood and, unfornately, sharp objects, such as nails, wires, pins, needles, tacks, hairpins and staples. A swallowed sharp object is extremely dangerous. It lodges in the second stomach, is churned about there, at length may work through the stomach wall, pierce the diaphragm and then the sac to the heart. If that happens incurable and often fatal inflammation of the sac results, causing a disease of the heart called traumatic pericarditis.

Wires that fasten labels to feed sacks are a real menace. Shingle nails have caused many losses. The practical farmer makes it a habit to dispose of every sharp object he sees where it can do no harm. Punctures of the hoof often end in fatal lockjaw, horses being the commonest sufferers. People may contract the disease in the same way. A dairyman of my acquaintance used a wire brush to scrub the cow mangers. Wires fell out and got into the feed. Seven fine cows died.—Dr. A. S. Alexander, Wisconsin.

Various Roots Are Good Feed for the Dairy Cow

Roots of all kinds are good feed for dairy cows. Beets are especially valuable, for they not only supply nutrients in a good form, but they do not in any way affect the quality of milk. Rutabagas and turnips do affect the quality of milk, and especially if fed just before milking. If they are fed after milking, it is difficult to discern any flavor in the milk, but butter made from it will, upon standing a few weeks or months, develop an objectionable flavor. This has led some creameries producing high-quality butter to request their patrons not to feed turnips or rutabagas.

Dairy Notes

Cows do not enjoy moldy silage, and it makes horses sick.

* * *

Feeding minerals to dairy cows is relatively new, and we have not learned about it yet.

* * *

Clean the barn lots and dairy premises and haul off litter in order to destroy breeding places for flies.

* * *

The choice of a herd sire may make or break a man in the dairy business, say dairy specialists of the Pennsylvania State college. The future herd is dependent upon influences in operation now.

* * *

Remove the cows from pastures infested with wild onions and bitter weeds three hours before milking, to prevent bad odors and flavors to milk and cream.

* * *

Seed or sod the pastures with Bermuda, lespedeza or other desirable grasses. Native pasture grasses cannot be depended on.

MacMillan's Expedition

©Harris & Ewing

Rubber Boat Devised for MacMillan Expedition.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

EQUIPPED with two genii of modern invention, the airplane and the radio, the MacMillan Arctic expedition under the auspices of the National Geographic society, with the active co-operation of the navy, will attempt to explore the earth's largest remaining "blind spot," an unknown million square miles between the Alaskan peninsula and the North pole. Amphibian airplanes, capable of landing on water, ice or land will be taken by ship to Etah, northern Greenland, within 700 miles of the North pole, and from there and supplemental bases will fly over tremendous areas either wholly unexplored or practically unknown.

The major objective, the region between Alaska and the pole, one-third the area of the United States, has never been seen by a human eye. It is considered possible that it holds a hitherto unknown continent, and it is probable that some sort of land exists there.

The existence of this land is postulated on reports of explorers who have skirted the edges of the unknown area, and of observations of tides and ice conditions along this fringe, which conditions indicate the existence of land.

Should such land exist it will be of great future economic importance in view of the commercial flying that, in years to come, will be done across the Arctic region.

The combination of aircraft and radio in Arctic exploration is a new feature of exploration, which not only adds romance and adventure to the undertaking, but which enhances the scientific value of the expedition.

In Summer and Daylight.

Hitherto our information about the Far North has been from explorers who had to penetrate it in winter, when the ice was continuous; summer flying makes possible observations of entirely different conditions, with 24 hours of daylight to aid the flyers.

This same daylight, however, as radio fans will realize, is a handicap to broadcasting, because night time is radio time. The use of the new short wave length apparatus, under these conditions, is an experiment which will be of value to the new science of wireless communication.

Upper air temperatures in the Far North are almost as little known as the million square miles which may shroud a long-hidden continent. Summer records of these conditions not only will have a value to future flying but may have a direct bearing on weather forecasting.

Forecasting weather consists largely in detecting new disturbances as they show up on the western and northwestern borders of the United States, learning their characteristics, and figuring out the paths they probably will follow because of prevailing barometric pressures and temperatures ahead of them.

The great majority of what the weather forecasters call the "lows"—that is the areas of subnormal barometric pressure—seem to originate over the warm sea south of the Aleutian islands in the winter, and over the interior of Alaska during the summer. But some of the conditions which cause these "lows" to be "built up" in those places and create "highs" to the east have their birth farther north in the Polar regions, and a better knowledge of temperatures pressure and wind changes there undoubtedly would facilitate weather forecasting.

In the search for the beginnings of its weather the United States is not concerned with the entire Polar regions. It is most concerned, it happens, with the unexplored territory which lies north of Alaska.

Temperatures, pressures and wind conditions—the vital weather factors—are not known in the regions north from Alaska to the pole. Exploration of this area is a preliminary to making detailed observations of these conditions which directly affect farms and orchards of the United States.

Plans for the Expedition.

Etah, the main base of the expedition, the northernmost settlement in the world, lies near the northwestern corner of Greenland at the head of Baffin bay where narrow Smith sound begins. Directly across Smith sound to the west lies Ellsmere island, the northern part of which is known as Grant Land. This land mass is an extensive region itself. From the southern tip of Ellsmere island to the northern tip of Grant Land is a distance equal to that from Chicago to Memphis, while the greatest width, east and west, is about that across the state of Illinois. West of Ellsmere island, across a narrow sound, is Axel Heiberg island, almost as large as Vermont and New Hampshire combined. At Cape Thomas Hubbard, the northern tip of Axel Heiberg island, the MacMillan expedition will establish its supplemental base for the exploration of the great unknown area north of Alaska. Fuel, oil and supplies will be relayed from the ship at Etah to Cape Hubbard, 250 miles away, and when all is in readiness, the planes, fitted with extra fuel tanks, will take off from this base and fly out over the Polar sea to the west, as ignorant of what lies before them as was Columbus when he sailed out into the Atlantic.

From Cape Hubbard to the center of the great unknown area is, roughly, 600 miles, which will make a total of 1,200 miles to be covered by the planes. It is hoped that the extra fuel tanks will permit the planes to cover this distance in a continuous flight. If ice conditions are favorable, other attempts may be made north and south of this direct line, thus eliminating thousands of square miles of unknown area from the maps of the world today. Food will be taken in the planes for several days of exploration of any lands that may be found in this area.

Following the return to the ship at Etah, other trips will be attempted north to the center of Ellsmere island and Grant Land to Cape Columbia at the edge of the Polar sea, where Peary's record is to be found, stating that he reached the North pole on April 6, 1909.

To Visit Greenland Ice Cap.

The great Greenland ice cap, 500,000 square miles of area, offers another field for exploration by plane. It is supposed to reach a height of about 100,000 feet. No one has ever visited that part of the ice cap between 70 and 80 degrees north latitude, the center of which is, roughly, 340 miles from Etah. This will mean a continuous flight of 680 miles, which can be accomplished in about five hours. The condition of the Greenland ice cap is such, however, that the planes should have no difficulty in making a landing every few minutes.

The MacMillan expedition will begin its explorations even before reaching the Etah base on its trip north. The ship will put into Julianehaab in southern Greenland, to permit members of the party to study the ruins of the old Norse settlement that was founded in that neighborhood in the days of Erik the Red, some 1,500 years ago. Another stop will be made at Godthaab, 200 miles farther north where similar ruins will be inspected.

At the conclusion of its explorations from the Etah and Cape Hubbard bases, the expedition will start its ship south on the return journey, but will make additional explorations en route. From a station on Bylot Island the planes will fly over Baffin Island, one of the most interesting lands in the North, some 600 miles long, 200 miles wide, and yet unexplored, although it was discovered in about 1500. On the maps of today there are a few lakes. The Eskimos state there are thousands and thousands of lakes in the interior of this great land.

Farther south the party will pause again in its journey homeward to make airplane observations over the interior of northern Labrador, which is practically unknown. Search will be made for ruins of buildings said by the Eskimos to have been built long ago by a strange people who came in from the sea in open boats without masts and without sails. These may be ruins of Norse settlements. Information gathered on the northward trip at the old Norse settlement of Greenland will be used in an effort to determine the origin of the Labrador ruins.

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

On Signing Papers for Strangers

"Did you hear about the terrible thing that happened to Mrs. Thompson, Aunt Emmy?" asked Maud. "It seems that a man came to see her to ask her to invest in some securities his firm was selling, and she said she did not have any ready money. He asked her if she had some Liberty Bonds, and she showed him her one Liberty Bond, a thousand dollar one. He told her that there were a number of counterfeit bonds about and upon examining her bond said there were some marks that indicated it might be spurious. Poor Mrs. Thompson nearly fainted and begged the stranger to tell her what to do about it.

"He told her not to be unduly alarmed, that there was a chance that he was mistaken. His firm was indignant, he said, about the counterfeit bonds that had been foisted on the public and intended to do everything in its power to run down the culprits. They employed a man who was an authority on counterfeits and he could tell in a minute if her bond was good or not. So Mrs. Thompson let him have the bond to take to his office for examination."

"And, of course, he didn't bring it back," commented Aunt Emmy.

"Worse than that!" Maud went on. "He said that, being a widow, she should be very careful in her business dealings, so he made her sign what he called a receipt, although she didn't read it. About a week after his visit she received a number of shares of stock that she says she never heard of and certainly never bought. So she wrote to the investment house the stock came from and said she thought a mistake had been made. Imagine her surprise when she was informed that she had signed an order for those shares of stock in exchange for a $1,000 Liberty Bond!

"First she was coming right over to see you and then decided not to, because she felt ashamed when she remembered that you had warned her about being taken in, now that Mr. Thompson is dead and she has to handle her own business affairs. My brother Tom says he thinks nothing can be done about it, as the receipt bearing her signature is really an order for the stock."

"I am sorry to hear this, Maud," said Aunt Emmy. "What a pity she did not take her bond to the bank to have it examined if that slick salesman aroused suspicions in her mind as to its genuineness. She would have been dealing with people of integrity, whom she could trust absolutely. And yet she allowed herself to be duped by a perfect stranger!

"Yet there must be a lot of that sort of thing when you consider that over $600,000,000 a year is being taken away from the honest people in the United States by stock swindlers. If the people would only learn to trust the guidance of their financial affairs to their banks and never sign anything they have not read and do not understand, there would be less unhappiness about money matters."—Anne B. Aymes.

Cheerful Thought.

Hardest Substance.

The hardest substance known is probably the diamond, and the next carborundum. The softest metal is mercury and the next potassium. Of the more common metals lead is probably the softest with gold next. Gold is probably the most malleable metal and silver next.

Breadfruit.

The breadfruit, with the cocoanut and banana, furnishes the chief food of the natives of the Pacific islands. That is why we call it "breadfruit," because, for them, it takes the place of bread. Apart from its fruit, the tree itself is a very useful one, for, when beaten out, the inner bark forms a fine white cloth called tapa cloth.

Commencement A Big Success

The largest crowd in the history of Holt attended the Commencement exercises given in the High School Auditorium last Saturday night. Every number on the program was given very well.

The chief speaker of the evening, Supt. C. G. Selvig of Crookston, delivered a very interesting talk on "Education and Life". Supt. G. J. Smith gave an excellent speech prefacing his presentation of the class to R. A. Werner, President of the School Board. Mr. Werner presented the diplomas after a very good talk. Rev. M. B. Ordahl delivered the Invocation and the Benediction in a fitting manner. The Valedictory address was given by Bennie C. Hagglund.

Two solos by Robert J. Lund and a piano solo by Mrs. Ole Johnson, both very well rendered, completed the program.

The graduates are: Gladys Tweet, Alice Swan, Esther Thompson and Bennie C. Hagglund.

Minnesota Farm Co-ops Make Big Strides

Fully 90 per cent of the farmers in Minnesota do business through cooperative organizations, according to the Sears Roebuck Agricultural Foundation, which report a 129 per cent gain in membership of farmers' business organizations in the state since 1915.

Ten years ago the membership of the 930 farmers' cooperative organizations then in existence in the state was 90,300. Today the Foundation states, the figures have jumped over the two hundred thousand mark, while the number of organizations has increased to more than 1300.

Dairy cooperatives head the list of farmers' coopeative efforts in the state with 548 distinct organizations, according to the Foundation. Livestock organizations come next with 300 and grain follows with 268. In addition there are 78 fruis and vegetable groups and other miscellaneous organizations embracing activities in poultry, wool, and other lines.

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

ON THE SOUND OF WORDS

"Aunt Emmy," said Helen, handing her a letter, "I want you to tell me what you think of this as an investment for that money I have in the bank." Aunt Emmy adjusted her spectacles and read the letter carefully.

"I see," she remarked, "that you are offered debenture bonds in the Blank Manufacturing Corporation——"

"Yes!" cried Helen, interrupting her. "That's what makes me think so well of it. A debenture bond must be so safe!"

"Why do you say that?" inquired Aunt Emmy. "What, exactly, is a debenture bond?"

Helen hesitated while Aunt Emmy looked at her with a twinkle in her eyes. Then she stammered something about security.

"Now, child," admonished Aunt Emmy, "don't get flustered. It's very simple. When you buy a bond, whatever it is called, you loan your money to the company putting out the bonds. The word debenture comes from the Latin word 'debeo,' which means, as you should know if you remember your schooling, 'I owe.' Now, then, if you lend someone money, you would expect security unless the character of the borrower was so high that you would feel safe merely in holding his I. O. U. In the case of a debenture bond you are loaning money on a company's I. O. U. The company offering you debenture bonds does not pledge or mortgage any property to secure the bonds.

"If the company is in good standing, has a high credit rating and is making money, a debenture bond is a good investment. If the company is weak a debenture bond is a risky thing to buy. It all depends on the soundness of the company and not on the sound of the word 'debenture.' As for the company described in this letter, I don't know anything about it, do you?"

"No," admitted Helen reluctantly, "I do not know a thing. After what you have told me I wish I did. How do you suppose I can find out who and what they are?"

"There is nothing easier than that," rejoined her aunt. "All you have to do is to go down to the bank and ask them to give you a report on the Blank Manufacturing Corporation. They will be glad to look into this for you and will give you some really good advice if you want to invest your money in something safe. Never hesitate about talking to your banker about your financial affairs. He is willing to help you at any time."

BANKERS HELP

Pierce County Bankers Association, Wisconsin, have sent a boy and a girl to the week's Short Course at the University of Wisconsin, all the banks sharing in the expense. The Association is active in boys' and girls' club work.

Eaton County, Michigan, bankers sponsored an enthusiastic dairy-alfalfa meeting at Charlotte. As a direct result of the last campaign, 2,000 acres of alfalfa have been added. A county-wide bovine tuberculosis eradication campaign is being conducted with every assurance that the county will be on the accredited list this fall. Three cow testing associations have been organized.

Richland County Bankers Association, North Dakota, is one of the county associations which has organized to carry out the work of the boys' and girls' clubs and the "alfalfa on every farm" project. This program was adopted at a State banker-farmer meeting at Fargo in February.

FREE OUTDOOR MOVIES TO BE GIVEN IN THE EVENING

Saturday, June 6, has been set aside as Community Day in Holt. Various attractive offers of reduced prices have been offered by the merchants and other business men are preparing for the big day.

The greatest attraction of the day, however, is the free movies on the school grounds in the evening. The business men, headed by P. L. Anderson, have signed a contract with the Community Amusement Association of Minnesota for having outdoor movies every Saturday evening for 20 weeks, beginning with June 6.

Here, people, is a chance to boost for our live business men, to trade at home, and thus to foster home industries. Trade at home and keep the almighty dollar in the neighborhood.

Better Mailing Week

The Post Office Department has set aside the week from June 1-7, 1925 as better mailing week. Posters and warnings have been broadcasted thruout the nation. Some of the popular catches manufactured during this campaign follow:

"Uncle Sam has indigestion. His system is clogged with undeliverable mail. A letter worth writing is worthy of care in addressing and SHOULD CARRY A RETURN ADDRESS."

DO YOU KNOW

That 21,000,000 letters went to the Dead Letter Office last year?

That 803,000 parcels did likewise?

That 100,000 letters go into the mail yearly in perfectly blank envelopes?

That $55,000.00 in cash is removed annually from misdirected envelopes?

That 12,000.00 in postage stamps is found in similiar fashion?

That $3,000,000.00 in checks, drafts and money orders never reach intended owners?

That Uncle Sam collects $92,000 a year in postage for the return of mail sent to the Dead Letter Office?

That it costs Uncle Sam $1,740,000 yearly to look up addresses on misdirected mail?

That 200,000,000 letters are given this service, and - -

That it costs in one city alone, $500.00 daily?

AND DO YOU KNOW?

That this vast sum could be saved and the Dead Letter Office abolished if each piece of mail carried a return address, and if each parcel were wrapped in stout paper and tied with strong cord?

Moral: Every man knows his own address if not that of his correspondent. Put in the upper left hand corner!

Not only that but the Dead Letter Office and all its attendant expense would go out of business because less than one letter in a hundred reaching that institution contains a return address.

Nixie! Nixie! What is a Nixie?

It is a piece of mail so incorrectly or incompletely addressed, or so improperly prepared that it can not be delivered or returned without special treatment and it goes to - - -

The post office hospital for a postal operation. It differs from a dead letter in that a dead letter, parcel, or circular, can neither be delivered nor returned, and goes to the post office morgue for buriel.

One's Judgment.

Our judgment is something we take no particular pride in, if we don't have to exercise it in behalf of other people.

Placability.

Nothing is more praiseworthy, nothing more suited to a great and illustrious man than placability and a merciful disposition.

Here are advantages obtainable only in the new De Laval Cream Separator:

GREATER CAPACITY: New capacities have been increased 10%.

CLOSER SKIMMING: The improved bowl design, together with the patented milk distributor, gives still greater skimming efficiency.

EASIER TO TURN: Low speed, short crank, and automatic oiling throughout, make it the easiest and least tiring to the operator.

WEARS LONGER: Due to its much lower bowl speed, high grade of materials used, and careful and exacting workmanship, the De Laval outlasts and outwears other makes from 5 to 15 years.

DE PAOLA WINS BIG RACE CLASSIC

Berlenbach Is New Light Heavy Champion; Lewis Wins Over Lewis.

Indianapolis.—Hundreds of thousands of sport fans throughout the nation attended athletic classics Saturday in which three important titles changed hands, scores of records were set and numerous minor sports rivalries were settled.

Peter De Paolo, a youthful automobile racing driver of only three years experience, nephew of the famous Ralph De Palma, tore across the finish line in the annual Indianapolis 500-mile classic Saturday, a mile and a quarter ahead of Benny Hill, who took second.

De Paolo made the 500 miles in 4:56:39.47, making an average speed of 101.13 miles an hour. His victory brought him $38,000 in prize money.

Over 145,000 watched the thrilling contest on the hugh speedway oval, setting a new attendance record for all sporting contests in the United States.

Paul Berlenbach, young pugilist of Astoria, N. Y., fought his way to the realization of his ambition at New York when he captured the junior light-heavyweight crown from the veteran Mike McTigue, in a close 15-round battle.

Ed "Strangler" Lewis took revenge on "Big" Wayne Munn, the giant university athletic, when he defeated the youthful star who threw him out of the ring last winter, two out of three falls at Michigan City, Ind. Munn took the first fall after 25 minutes of grappling but Lewis, spurred on by the exhibit of his diamond belt which was to go to Munn if the latter won, came back to take the second and third falls in only shortly longer time than it took Munn to get the first.

Joe Stecher, former world's champion wrestler, gained revenge on Stanislaus Zbyszko in their watch at St. Louis, winning two straight falls. The first took an hour and 23 minutes but the second came after only 5 additional minutes wrestling.

University of Southern California athletes captured the 1925 intercollegiate track title by capturing 33 points for the first place in the meet which closed at Philadelphia yesterday. The Pacific school replaces Yale, champions in 1924. Princeton was second in the meet.

BETTER LOCAL GOVERNMENT

Rigid Law Enforcement Needed, Coolidge Says in Memorial Address.

Washington.—With fitting ceremonies, the national capital paid its Memorial day tribute to the dead of all wars, President Coolidge leading in observance of the day by delivering an address at Arlington cemetery, the resting place of more than 50,000 soldiers and sailors.

Services also were held at a half dozen other cemeteries, and on the U. S. S. Grampus, where Spanish war veterans, members of Admiral Dewey camp, were in charge of the ceremony. In tribute to sailors who gave their lives for their country, particularly in the World war, a poppy anchor was dropped into the Potomac river from the bow of the U. S. S. Sylph, the secretary of the navy's yacht.

After his address in the Arlington amphitheater, President Coolidge walked to the nearby tomb of the Unknown Soldier and reverently placed on it a large wreath. Mrs. Coolidge laid a small bouquet of roses on the top of the tomb.

In his speech, the president traced the clash for authority between the states and the federal government which culminated in the Civil war, and, he said, still persists to a less extent. He made an appeal for observance of law by individual Americans and for rigid enforcement of the law by individual Americans and for rigid enforcement of the law by states and local government.

3 YEAR HEAT RECORD BROKEN

North Dakota Hottest Place in U. S. and Canada.

Fargo, N. D.—North Dakota was the hottest place in the United States and Canada Saturday.

Bismarck, with a temperature of 96 degrees, reported the highest thermometer reading on a list of 50 scattered cities from all corners of the continent.

Fargo ranked second with 94, while such warm weather centers as Jacksonville, Fla., reported 82; New Orleans, 86; Salt Lake City, 74; Los Angeles, 72; San Francisco, 60; San Antonio, 90.

After equaling, early this month, the hottest day of the entire season last year, the mercury here extended itself another degree and thereby smashed all heat marks for this vicinity since August 14, 1922.

In 1923, as in 1924, the hottest day was 93 degrees. The mark set in 1922 was 97 degrees.

Cattle Stampede San Juan.

San Juan, Porto Rico.—A shipment of 154 young blooded cattle from Texas created havoc along the waterfront and in the principal streets here, order being restored only by the combined efforts of the police and fire departments. Boys and men in automobiles finally completed the roundup. The cattle became frightened while being unloaded from a steamer and stampeded. One bull went for pedestrians until repeated shots from policemen's revolvers stopped him. Another was killed by a fire engine.

Capt. G. F. Steele of the steam yacht Rowena, who will command that boat for Captain MacMillan in the exploration of the Arctic regions north of Greenland.

WILL LAND LOS ANGELES

Definite Plans to Bring Los Angeles to Ground Are Received at Snelling.

Minneapolis—Definite advice, that the navy dirigible Los Angeles will make a landing on its visit to the Twin Cities June 8 was received by Lieutenant Colonel E. M. Norton, acting commandant at Fort Snelling.

Heretofore plans for the trip west included only a cruise over the Twin Cities, because of the difficulty of landing the huge craft without an experienced landing crew.

A radiogram received by Colonel Norton from the navy department announced that a navy officer, expert in supervising the landing of dirigibles, will arrive at Fort Snelling to lay plans for the landing of the Los Angeles, and to pick the landing crew of 300 required to pull the big ship to the ground.

TIDAL WAVE ON LAKE HURON

Proposes Payment in 1933 of $5,000,000 on Debt to United States.

Paris—The Caillaux-Briand preliminary draft proposals for the payment of the French war debt to the United States provide for an eight year moratorium. The first annuity will be due in 1933 and then there will be amortization over 72 years at 3 per cent.

The French expect that if the Dawes plan is working at all it will be paying the maximum reparations in 1933 and the government expects to apply a half to indemnity the British debt and the balance, plus other revenues, will go toward the American payments.

ASK GRAIN RATE INCREASE

Proposes Increase on Wheat, Bran, Shorts, Rough Mill Feeds.

Minneapolis—A petition asking for an increase in Minnesota rates on grain and some grain products was filed by nine railroads with the Minneosta railroad and warehouse commission.

SUPREME COURT IS SWAMPED

Cases Are Filed More Rapidly Than They Can Be Considered.

Washington—Efforts of the supreme court to catch up with its docket are not meeting with any success this year.

Although the court has striven diligently in that direction, it finds that cases continue to be filed faster than it can dispose of them. The outlook now is that when the current term ends next month there will be more cases on the docket, than it had pending for action when it met last October.

FRENCH DEFEAT RIFF FORCES

Town Is Captured—Heavy Native Losses Reported.

Rabat, Morocco—French troops under Colonel Freydenburg have had a successful engagement against the Moroccan forces along the Ouergha river. An official statement tells of the capture of Gara des Mizziat by his army after fierce fighting. The enemy forces were estimated at 5,000 rifles.

"The enemy resisted desperately," says the statement, "but was thrown back with heavy losses, despite counter attacks culminating in hand-to-hand fighting."

British Budget Bill Carried.

London—In the house of commons, Winston Churchill, chancellor of the exchequer, obtained the second reading of the finance bill embodying his budget proposals. The bill passed its second reading after closure was applied and carried, and Philip Snowden's motion to reject the bill was defeated by 331 to 139. Application of the closure provoked angry protests from the opposition. The chancellor again had to submit to much criticism from Mr. Snowden, Ramsay MacDonald, Mr. Lloyd George.

U. S. MAY CURB FOREIGN LOANS

Administration Considers Plan to Force Refunding of War Debts.

Washington—With officials convinced that Italy is making a serious attempt to accomplish a refunding settlement with the United States, methods of exerting more pressure on other governments having unfunded obligations were given consideration in government circles.

Talk was revived of employing administration opposition to flotation of loans in America by those governments which have taken no definite steps to reach a funding agreement. While it was explained that the federal government cannot prohibit such loans, its moral influence, if thrown against the bonds of any nation or municipality, would be expected by officials to prevent any large scale disposal of such securities.

20,000 GREET OSLO SINGERS

Bishop Johan P. Lunde Helps Welcome Chorus.

Minneapolis — Fifty broad smiles, above wreaths of flowers, greeted more than 10,000 Norwegians who packed the Milwaukee station and 10,000 more who jammed the streets to welcome the Oslo University Chorus—vanguard of the great army of visitors who will come to the Norse-American Centennial in June, and the first official delegation to arrive.

Rev. Johan P. Lunde, bishop of Oslo, the first of the group of Norwegian leaders who will represent that Country at the centennial, was on hand to greet his countrymen at the station.

Tired and rumpled the singers looked—but very happy and excited, as they shouted "god dag" to smiling faces around them, and exclaimed over huge baskets of pink roses and snap dragons, the wreaths of red roses, the buttonhole bouquets of lilies of the valley.

INDICTED IN EVOLUTION CASE

Dayton Instructor Formally Charged —Trial Is Set.

Dayton, Tenn.—John T. Scopes, high school science teacher, was indicted by a Rha county grand jury here on a charge of teaching evolution in a public school in violation of the Tennessee law.

The grand jury was assembled in special session to pass on the case presented to it as a result of a preliminary hearing two weeks ago when three justices of the peace held Scopes for grand jury action. Judge John T. Raulston, presiding, charged the jury on the law of the theory of evolution as it shall be taught in the public schools of Tennessee, the first time such a charge has been delivered in a Tennessee court.

FRENCH ARRANGE DEBT PLAN

Earth Shocks Accompany Phenomena in Lakes Huron and Ontario.

Alpena, Mich.—A big steel freighter was left high and dry on the shore of Lake Huron here, and another ship in Lake Ontario was torn from its moorings and swept 400 feet away by a series of marine disturbances, without precedent on the Great Lakes.

Summer cottages were picked up and swept from their foundations and small shipping was damaged by the waves, which rolled far inland.

Residents on the shores of Lake Ontario said they felt earth shocks during the disturbances. Never in their memory, they said, have such waves occurred without wind to drive them.

ENVOYS SEE CROWN JEWELS

Soviet Displays $50,000,000 Gems to Dispel Rumors of Disappearance.

Moscow — Foreign ministers and ambassadors stationed here saw the Russian crown jewels.

In order to remove the belief abroad that the crown jewels had disappeared or been reduced in number, the Soviet government invited all foreign diplomats to visit the state vault where these treasures are stored.

WILL VOTE UPON BEER BILL

Senate Passes Resolution for Referendum to Modify Volstead Act.

Madison, Wis.—Wisconsin citizens will vote in November, 1926, on the question whether it is the sentiment of the state that congress modify the Volstead act to permit manufacture, sale and distribution of 2.75 per cent alcoholic content beer, under government regulation. The resolution embodying the referendum cleared the state senate after an assembly amendment was concurred in 15 to 11.

London — The immediate construction of a direct two track standard guage railway between Hendaye, on the French frontier, to Madrid and Algeciras on the Straits of Gibraltar, is one of the principal accords reached between Jean Louis Malvy in behalf of the French government and Dictator Primo de Rivera during M. Malvy's visit. The new line will cut in half the time between France and Africa and shorten the Paris-Madrid trip by 10 hours, it is estimated. The railway will be of greatest importance to France.

SINCLAIR, DOHENY, FALL RE-INDICTED

Federal Grand Jury Returns New True Bills in Teapot Dome Investigations.

Los Angeles, Calif.—The Doheny oil interests, in a decision rendered by Federal Judge Paul J. McCormick, were ordered to give up for cancellation their leases in naval oil reserve No. 1, Elk Hills, California, and the contracts for construction of oil storage facilities at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii. The decision covering 92 points of fact and 14 conclusions of law, declared the leases void for two reasons.

Washington — Albert B. Fall, Edward L. Doheny, and Harry F. Sinclair, whose indictments as a result of the oil scandal recently were dismissed on a technicality, were re-indicted by a District of Columbia grand jury.

As in the previous case, the indictments charged conspiracy in connection with the Teapot Dome and Elk hill oil leases.

Edward L. Doheny, Jr., who previously had been indicted also, was not reindicted.

The original indictments, returned here last summer, were thrown out of court on April 3, last, on the ground that the indictment officer of the department of justice had been present in the grand jury room, and that his presence was illegal because prosecution of the case was in the hands of the government's special oil counsel.

ALLIES AGREE ON ARMS NOTE

Demands for Fulfillment of Treaty Terms Will be Sent to Berlin.

London — It was understood here that the British and French governments have reached an agreement regarding the demands they will incorporate in the note to Germany concerning her disarmament under the Treaty of Versailles.

The note may be sent to Germany soon after the meeting of the reparations commissions. It is reported this meeting will formally signify that Germany has carried out her financial obligations under the Dawes plan.

What bearing the statement of the reparation commission will have on the evacuation of the Cologne area is uncertain but it is stated authoritatively that evacuation is unlikely until Germany has carried out her obligations regarding disarmament.

59 MEN TRAPPED IN MINE

Bodies of 27 Workers Brought to Surface by Rescuers.

Coal Glen, N. C.—Three-score miners were buried by an explosion below the 1,000-foot lateral of the Carolina Coal Co.'s mine near here. Mine workers who had entered the main shaft in relays, succeeded in bringing to the surface 27 bodies, the first to be taken from the pit.

Records of the mine showed that 59 men, 39 white and 20 Negroes, had comprised the crew which went into the mine, while mine officials reported that 71 miners' lamps were out and it was believed the entombed list might be increased when finally checked.

Hope was expressed by Bion H. Butler, vice president of the mining company, and William Hill of the Cummock coal mine, nearby, that some of the entombed men might live.

When, in 1918, Dirk took off his uniform he went into the bond department of the Great Lakes Trust company in which Theodore Storm had a large interest. He said that the war had disillusioned him.

"What did you think war was going to do?" said Selina. "Purify! It never has yet."

It was understood, by Selina at least, that Dirk's abandoning of his profession was a temporary thing. Quick as she usually was to arrive at conclusions, she did not realize until too late that this son of hers had definitely deserted building for bonds; that the only structures he would rear were her own castles in Spain. His first two months as a bond salesman netted him more than a year's salary at his old post at Hollis & Sprague's. When he told this to Selina, in triumph, she said, "Yes, but there isn't much fun in it, is there? This selling things on paper? Now architecture, that must be thrilling. Putting a building down on paper—little marks here, straight lines there, figures, calculations, blueprints, measurements—and then, suddenly one day, the actual building itself. Steel and stone and brick, with engines throbbing inside it like a heart, and people flowing in and out. Part of a city. A piece of actual beauty conceived by you! Oh, Dirk!" To see her face then must have given him a pang, it was so alive, so eager.

He found excuses for himself. "Selling bonds that make that building possible isn't so dull, either."

But she waved that aside almost contemptuously. "What nonsense, Dirk. It's like selling seats at the box office of a theater for the play inside."

Dirk had made many new friends in the last year and a half. More than that, he had acquired a new manner; an air of quiet authority, of assurance. The profession of architecture was put definitely behind him. He did not say to Selina that he had put the other work from him. But after six months in his new position he knew that he would never go back.

From the start he was a success. Within one year he was so successful that you could hardly distinguish him from a hundred other successful young Chicago business and professional men whose clothes were made at Peel's; who lunched at the Noon club on the roof of the First National bank where Chicago's millionaires ate corned-beef hash whenever that plebeian dish appeared on the bill of fare. He had had a little thrill out of his first meal at this club whose membership was made up of the "big men" of the city's financial circle. Now he could even feel a little flicker of contempt for them. He had known old Aug Hempel, of course, for years, as well as Michael Arnold, and, later, Phillip Emery, Theodore Storm, and others. But he had expected these men to be different.

They were not at all the American Big Business Man of the comic papers and of fiction—that yellow, nervous, dyspeptic creature who lunches off milk and pie. They were divided into two definite types. The older men of between fifty and sixty were great high-colored fellows of full habit. Their faces were impassive, their eyes shrewd, hard. Their talk was colloquial and frequently illiterate. They often said "was" for "were." "Was you going to see Baldwin about that South American stuff or is he going to ship it through without?" Most of them had known little of play in their youth and now they played ponderously and a little sadly and yet eagerly as does one to whom the gift of leisure had come too late. They ruined their palates and livers with strong cigars, thinking cigarette smoking undignified and pipes common. Only a few were so rich, so assured as to smoke cheap light panatellas. Old Aug Hempel was one of these. Dirk noticed that when he made one of his rare visits to the Noon club his entrance was met with a little stir, a deference. He was nearing seventy-five now; was still straight, strong, zestful of life; a magnificent old buccaneer among the pettier crew. His had been the direct and brutal method—swish! swash! and his enemies walked the plank. The younger men eyed him with a certain amusement and respect.

These younger men whose ages ranged from twenty-eight to forty-five were disciples of the new system in business. They were graduates of universities. They had known luxury all their lives. They were the sons or grandsons of those bearded, rugged, and rather terrible old boys who, in 1835 or 1840, had come out of County Limerick or County Kilkenny, or out of Scotland or the Rhineland to mold this new country in their strong hairy hands.

Dirk listened to the talk of the Noon club, looking about him carefully, appraisingly. The president of an advertising firm lunching with a banker; a bond salesman talking to a rare book collector; a packer seated at a small table with Horatio Craft, the sculptor.

Two years and Dirk had learned to "grab the Century" in order to save an hour or so of time between Chicago and New York. Peel said it was a pleasure to fit a coat to his broad, flat tapering back, and trousers to his strong sturdy legs. His color, inherited from his red-cheeked Dutch ancestors brought up in the fresh sea-laden air of the Holland flats, was fine and clear. Sometimes Selina, in pure sensuous delight, passed her gnarled, work-worn hand over his shoulders and down his fine, strong, straight back. He had been abroad twice. He learned to call it "running over to Europe for a few days." It had all come about in a scant two years, as is the theatrical way in which life speeds in America.

Selina was a little bewildered now at this new Dirk whose life was so full without her. Sometimes she did not see him for two weeks; or three. He sent her gifts which she smoothed and touched delightedly and put away; fine soft silken things, hand-made—which she could not wear. The habit of years was too strong upon her. Though she had always been a woman of dainty habits and fastidious tastes the grind of her early married life had left its indelible mark. Sun and wind and rain and the cold and heat of the open prairie had wreaked their vengeance on her flouting of them. Her skin was tanned, weather-beaten; her hair rough and dry. Her eyes, in that frame, startled you by their unexpectedness, they were so calm, so serene, yet so alive. They were the beautiful eyes of a wise young girl in the face of a middle-aged woman. Life was still so fresh to her. There was about her something arresting, something compelling. You felt it.

"I don't see how you do it!" Julie Arnold complained one day as Selina was paying her one of her rare visits in town. "Your eyes are as bright as a baby's and mine look like dead oysters." They were up in Julie's dressing room in the new house on the north side—the new house that was now the old house.

"So Big!" Answered Dirk.

Julie was massaging. Her eyes had an absent look. Suddenly: "Listen, Selina. Dirk and Paula are together too much. People are talking."

"Talking?" The smile faded from Selina's face.

"Goodness knows I'm not strait-laced. You can't be in this day and age. If I had ever thought I'd live to see the time when— Well, since the war of course, anything's all right, seems. But Paula has no sense. Everybody knows she's insane about Dirk. That's all right for Dirk, but how about Paula! She won't go anywhere unless he's invited. They're together all the time, everywhere. I asked her if she was going to divorce Storm and she said no, she hadn't enough money of her own and Dirk wasn't earning enough. His salary's thousands, but she's used to millions. Well!"

"They were boy and girl together," Selina interrupted, feebly.

"They're not any more. Don't be silly, Selina. You're not as young as that."

No, she was not as young as that. When Dirk next paid one of his rare visits to the farm she called him into her bedroom—the cool, dim shabby bedroom with the old black walnut bed in which she had lain as Pervus DeJong's bride more than thirty years ago. She looked somehow girlish in the dim light, her great soft eyes gazing up at him

"Dirk, sit down here at the side of my bed the way you used to."

"I'm dead tired, Mother. Twenty-seven holes of golf before I came out."

"I know. You ache all over—a nice kind of ache. I used to feel like that when I'd worked in the fields all day, pulling vegetables, or planting." He was silent. She caught his hand. "You didn't like that. My saying that. I'm sorry. I didn't say it to make you feel bad, dear."

"I know you didn't, Mother."

"Dirk, do you know what that woman who writes the society news in the Sunday Tribune called you today?"

"No. What? I never read it."

"She said you were one of the jeunesse doree."

Dirk grinned. "Gosh!"

"I remember enough of my French at Miss Fister's school to know that that means gilded youth."

"Me! That's good! I'm not even spangled."

"Dirk!" her voice was low, vibrant. "Dirk, I don't want you to be a gilded youth. I don't care how thick the gilding. Dirk, that isn't what I worked in the sun and cold for. I'm not reproaching you; I didn't mind the work. Forgive me for even mentioning it. But, Dirk, I don't want my son to be known as one of the jeunesse doree. No! Not my son!"

"Now, listen, Mother. That's foolish. If you're going to talk like that. Like a mother in a melodrama whose son's gone wrong. . . . I work like a dog. You know that. You get the wrong angle on things, stuck out here on this little farm."

She sat up in bed, looking down at the thin end of her braid as she twined it round and round her finger. "Dirk, do you know sometimes I actually think that if you stayed here on the farm—"

"Good G—d, Mother! What for!"

"Oh, I don't know. Time to dream. Time to—no, I suppose that isn't true any more. I suppose the day is past when the genius came from the farm. Machinery has cut into his dreams. Patent binders, plows, reapers—he's a mechanic. He hasn't time to dream. Well. . . ."

She lay back, looked up at him. "Dirk, why don't you marry?"

"Why—there's no one I want to marry."

"No one who's free, you mean?"

He stood up. "I mean no one." He stooped and kissed her lightly. Her arms went round him close. Her hand with the thick gold wedding band on it pressed his head to her hard. "So big!" He was a baby again.

"You haven't called me that in years." He was laughing.

She reverted to the old game they had played when he was a child. "How big is my son! How big?" She was smiling, but her eyes were somber.

"So big!" answered Dirk, and measured a very tiny space between thumb and forefinger. "So big."

She faced him, sitting up very straight in bed, the little wool shawl hunched about her shoulders. "Dirk, are you ever going back to architecture? The war is history. It's now or never with you. Pretty soon it will be too late. Are you ever going back to architecture? To your profession?"

A clean amputation. "No, Mother."

She gave an actual gasp, as though icy water had been thrown full in her face. She looked suddenly old, tired. Her shoulders sagged. He stood in the doorway, braced for her reproaches. But when she spoke it was to reproach herself. "Then I'm a failure."

"Oh, what nonsense, Mother. I'm happy. You can't live somebody else's life. You used to tell me, when I was a kid, I remember, that life wasn't just an adventure, to be taken as it came, with the hope that something glorious was always hidden just around the corner. You said you had lived that way and it hadn't worked. You said—"

She interrupted him with a little cry. "I know I did. I know I did." Suddenly she raised a warning finger. Her eyes were luminous, prophetic. "Dirk, you can't desert her like that!"

"Desert who?" He was startled.

"Beauty! Self-expression. Whatever you want to call it. You wait! She'll turn on you some day. Some day you'll want her, and she won't be there."

Inwardly he had been resentful of this bedside conversation with his mother. She made little of him, he thought, while outsiders appreciated his success. He had said, "So big," measuring a tiny space between thumb and forefinger in answer to her half-playful question, but he had not honestly meant it. He thought her ridiculously old-fashioned now in her viewpoint, and certainly unreasonable. But he would not quarrel with her.

"You wait, too, Mother," he said now, smiling. "Some day your wayward son will be a real success. Wait till the millions roll in. Then we'll see."

She lay down, turned her back deliberately upon him, pulled the covers up about her.

"Shall I turn out your light, Mother, and open the windows?"

"Meena'll do it. She always does. Just call her. . . . Good-night."

He knew that he had come to be a rather big man in his world. Influence had helped. He knew that, too. But he shut his mind to much of Paula's maneuvering and wire-pulling—refused to acknowledge that her lean, dark, eager fingers had manipulated the mechanism that ordered his career. Paula herself was wise enough to know that to hold him she must not let him feel indebted to her. She knew that the debtor hates his creditor. She lay awake at night planning for him, scheming for his advancement, then suggested these schemes to him so deftly as to make him think he himself had devised them. She had even realized of late that their growing intimacy might handicap him if openly commented on. But now she must see him daily, or speak to him. Her telephone was a private wire leading only to her own bedroom. She called him the first thing in the morning; the last thing at night.

Her voice, when she spoke to him, was an organ transformed; low, vibrant, with a timbre in its tone that would have made it unrecognizable to an outsider. Her words were commonplace enough, but pregnant and meaningful for her.

"What did you do today? Did you have a good day? . . . Why didn't you call me? . . . Did you follow up that suggestion you made about Kennedy? I think it's a wonderful idea, don't you? You're a wonderful man, Dirk; did you know that? . . . I miss you. . . . Do you? . . . When? . . . Why not lunch? . . . Oh, not if you have a business appointment . . . How about five o'clock? . . . No, not there. . . . Oh, I don't know. It's so public. . . . Yes. . . . Good-by. . . . Good-night. . . . Good-night. . . ."

They began to meet rather furtively, in out-of-the-way places. They would lunch in department store restaurants where none of their friends ever came. They spent off afternoon hours in the dim, close atmosphere of the motion-picture palaces, sitting in the back row, seeing nothing of the film, talking in eager whispers that failed to annoy the scattered devotees in the middle of the house. When they drove it was on obscure streets.

Paula had grown very beautiful, her world thought. There was about her the aura, the glow, the roseate exhalation that surrounds the woman in love.

Frequently she irritated Dirk. At such times he grew quieter than ever; more reserved. As he involuntarily withdrew she advanced. Sometimes he thought he hated her—her hot, eager hands, her glowing, asking eyes, her thin, red mouth, her sallow, heart-shaped, exquisite face, her perfumed clothing, her air of ownership. That was it! Her possessiveness. Sometimes Dirk wondered what Theodore Storm thought and knew behind that impassive flabby white mask of his.

Dirk met plenty of other girls. Paula was clever enough to see to that. She asked them to share her box at the opera. She had them at her dinners. She affected great indifference to their effect on him. She suffered when he talked to one of them.

"Dirk, why don't you take out that nice Farnham girl?"

"Is she nice?"

"Well, isn't she? You were talking to her long enough at the Kirks' dance. What were you talking about?"

"Books."

"Oh. Books. She's awfully nice and intelligent, isn't she? A lovely girl!" She was suddenly happy. Books.

The Farnham girl was a nice girl. She was the kind of girl one should fall in love with and doesn't. The Farnham girl was one of many well-bred Chicago girls of her day and class. Fine, honest, clear-headed, frank, capable, good-looking in an indefinite and unarresting sort of way. Hair-colored hair, good teeth, good enough eyes, clear skin, sensible medium hands and feet; skated well, danced well, talked well. Read the books you had read. A companionable girl. Loads of money but never spoke of it. Traveled. Her hand met yours firmly—and it was just a hand. At the contact no current darted through you, sending its shaft with a little zing to your heart.

But when Paula showed you a book her arm, as she stood next you, would somehow fit into the curve of yours and you were conscious of the feel of her soft slim side against you.

He knew many girls. There was a distinct type known as the North Shore girl. Slim, tall, exquisite; a little fine nose, a high, sweet, slightly nasal voice, ear rings, a cigarette, luncheon at Huyler's. All these girls looked amazingly alike, Dirk thought; talked very much alike. They all spoke French with a pretty good accent; danced intricate symbolic dances; read the new books; had the same patter. They prefaced, interlarded, concluded their remarks to each other with, "My deah!" It expressed, for them, surprise, sympathy, amusement, ridicule, horror, resignation. "My deah! You should have seen her! My deeah!"—horror. Their slang was almost identical with that used by the girls working in his office. "She's a good kid," they said, speaking in admiration of another girl. They made a fetish of frankness. In a day when everyone talked in screaming headlines they knew it was necessary to red-ink their remarks in order to get them noticed at all. The word rot was replaced by garbage and garbage gave way to the ultimate swill. One no longer said "How shocking!" but, "How perfectly obscene!"

Astronomical Theories

The naval observatory says the belief is commonly held among astronomers that Mars is an older planet than the earth. The old theory of the origin of the solar system, called the nebular hypothesis, was first proposed by Laplace a hundred or more years ago. According to his view, the sun was once so large that it extended as far as the orbit of Neptune. In the process of shrinking to its present size it left bits of itself behind, each of which became a planet; so that the farther out a planet is, the older it is. However, there are many astronomers who do not accept this theory; several different theories are now given to explain the origin of the solar system.

THE KITCHEN CABINET

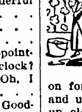
SPRINGTIME SUGGESTIONS.



In going over the closets and drawers this spring, give away to some one who can enjoy them the things that are too good to throw away or sell to the ragman.

The bits of lace and ribbon, the flowers and hat trimmings, old dishes, vases, in fact any thing that has passed its usefulness in your home pass on for some child or adult to enjoy and use. It takes will power to give up old heirlooms, but if they are to be kept in the attic, why not give them away and delight the heart of some one. When the final summons comes, as it will for all of us, do not leave the house full of things that might have brought joy to others, but give them where they will be appreciated, now.

Even in homes that are very simple as to furnishing and equipment it is most useful to have an inventory of its contents, in case of fire. A list of linens, bedding, silver, china, books, etc., is not difficult to prepare, and it is a great convenience from year to year.

Piece bags with a list of the important contents will save rummaging through other things to find that wanted. Pin the list on the bag. Label all boxes before placing them on the closet shelves. Even the most active memory will not always be able to recall in a hurry the article wanted.

Another household convenience is a card index. This may be used for the inventory as well as for recipes of various kinds. Have a set for left-over. For example, under tomato, give a few recipes in which varying quantities of tomato may be used. Every little while you will find a new one to add to the list.

Keep a list of foods that go well together, a hurry-up meal; when company comes you fail to think of many things you might have served, if you had a list to consult.

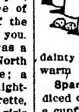
Faded hangings of silk or other materials which have become too faded to use may be dyed. Use a color which blends with the coloring of the room; often after dyeing goods that has some design which still shows, the hangings will be prettier than ever.

If troubled with ants sprinkle a little tartar emetic around the places they come in; it will quickly drive them away. Keep the powder away from food or pets, as it is a poison.

Delicate lace curtains that are very frail if washed one at a time and wrung through the wringer, even after the light starching, then pinned down to a rug or carpet will look like new. Spread a sheet, marking the width and length and pin to those lines.

The ideal washcloth for the baby is a piece of gauze folded into four thicknesss and bound around with a soft finished crocheted edge.

More Summer Dishes.



Gelatin dishes are easy to prepare, are digestible and especially good for warm weather desserts.

Tomato juice, water, seasonings and gelatin make good jelly in which to mold fish.

Lemon jello to which is added any fresh fruit at hand, molded, and served with cream, makes a very dainty and refreshing dessert for a warm day.

Spanish Salad. To two cupfuls of diced chicken add one diced cucumber, a cupful of walnut meats and a cupful of freshly-cooked and chilled peas. Mix with a highly-seasoned salad dressing and serve on lettuce.

Blueberry Pudding. Spread bread with butter, using as many slices as are needed, cover with fresh blueberries well-sweetened, and bake until thoroughly cooked. Serve hot or cold. The canned blueberries may be used, juice and all, left to mold and chill without cooking. Serve with cream.

There is no dessert or cake that is more popular than whipped cream cake. Prepare layer cake and fill with whipped cream which has been sweetened and flavored. Fresh strawberries crushed with sugar added to the cream makes a delightful flavor.

Add a pint of cooked chestnuts that have been mashed to a paste to a package of jello. Mold and serve with cream.

Iced Tea. Take two teaspoonfuls each of green and black tea, pour over a pint of boiling water and cover tightly. Let stand five minutes to draw. Take a large piece of ice, place in a granite pan and pour over the boiling water. When well chilled, add more ice and fill the glasses. Garnish each glass with a section of lemon. Tea prepared this way is much more delicately flavored than that which is allowed to stand.

Honey Ginger Snaps. Take a pint of honey, three-fourths of a pound of butter, two teaspoonfuls of ginger, boil together and cool. Add flour to make a mixture to roll. Roll very thin and bake quickly.

Add a little ginger ale to grape juice to give it snap and sparkle. The combination is good.

THE DAIRY

DECREASE IN FAT TEST IS EXPECTED

The appreciable falling off in the butterfat content of milk at this time of year when cows are put on pasture causes considerable consternation among some dairymen, and may lead them to believe that errors have been made at the creamery test. The dairy department of the New Jersey State College of Agriculture, New Brunswick points out that the change to pasture causes an increased milk flow which necessitates the butterfat's being distributed through a larger volume. This makes its percentage look smaller, but the total quantity is not less.

The college makes a few suggestions to aid in getting good samples.

One must be sure that the sample is truly representative of the lot of milk from which it is taken. Cows should be milked dry and the milk poured several times from one container to another. The sample should be taken immediately. Enough milk must be procured for two fat tests. This requires about one-fourth pint.

Care must be taken to prevent the sample from souring before it reaches the laboratory. To insure against souring, a preservative is added. Bichloride of mercury tablets are the most efficient and one-half tablet is enough. Formaldehyde or formalin may be used at the rate of three drops to a sample. In each case the preservative should be mixed thoroughly with the milk.

One of the most important steps is that of filling the sample bottle to overflowing before inserting the cork. If the bottle is not full the milk will be agitated in transit to such an extent that churning will result. When butter granules are once formed, it is difficult to get a reliable test. When small medicine bottles are used, it is the practice to make a hole in the cork with a nail. Fill the bottle entirely full of milk. Insert the cork and seal it by pushing a match into the hole in the cork. This will prevent the cork from being forced out by either gas or air escaping from the milk.

When these few directions are observed, there is no difficulty in obtaining an accurate determination of the fat content of the milk.

How to Feed Dairy Cows to Obtain Big Profits

Feed all the roughage a cow will eat. This should include succulent feed and a legume hay.

With a good roughage—as alfalfa, soy bean, or clover hay—feed a Jersey or Guernsey one pound of grain to each two and one-half to three pounds of milk; a Holstein, Ayrshire, Brown Swiss, or Shorthorn, one pound of grain for each three to three and one-half pounds of milk.

With a poor roughage, such as timothy or wild hay, feed a Jersey or Guernsey one pound of grain for each two pounds of milk; a Holstein, Ayrshire, Brown Swiss, or Shorthorn, one pound of grain for each two and one-half to three pounds of milk.

These rules for feeding dairy cattle are laid down in Bulletin 218, "Feeding the Dairy Herd," prepared by C. H. Eckles and O. G. Schrader of the dairy division, University of Minnesota, and just issued by the Minnesota agricultural experiment station. Copies can be obtained by addressing the Office of Publications, University Farm, St. Paul.

The good dairyman, the bulletin says, tries to maintain summer conditions the year round. The conditions of early summer which make possible maximum production are: Abundance of feed, palatable feed, a succulent ration, a sufficient amount of protein, moderate temperatures and comfortable surroundings.

Stringy Milk Caused by Certain Bacteria Form

Stringy milk, or milk that gets thick after standing awhile, is caused by a certain form of bacteria that get into the milk, either through the water used in washing the milk utensils, from the udder of the cow or cows, or from the dust of the feed given the animals. The source of the infection may be the cream separator, especially if care is not used to have this utensil carefully cleansed and sterilized each day. It may be well to keep the milk from each cow separate for a few days to determine whether or not the infection came from a single cow. It may take some investigation to discover the source of the trouble, and in the meantime all vessels used for the milk should be washed thoroughly and scalded after each using.

Varying Temperatures

Warm cream should never be mixed with cold cream as this will not only hasten the souring process, but will also give the cream an off-flavor. The proper way to mix the morning's cream with the cream of the evening before is to thoroughly cool the warm cream before it is mixed with the cold cream. While the cream is cooling the cover should be slightly raised to allow the animal flavor to escape and the cream should be stirred

Let's Get a 92-Scoring Butter!

It is very important to deliver your cream twice a week in order to get a 92 scoring butter.

All our butter is scored and inspected by the Government Inspector and whatever score he places on our butter is the basis on which the Creameries Ass'n makes payment. Cream a week old will never make butter scoring 92 even tho it is sweet. Our biggest trouble is with old flavor which shows up in butter a week or so after it is made.

It is very encouraging the way our patrons have realized the necessity of delivering their cream twice a week yet some seem to think that as long as their cream is sweet it will make the highest grade butter.

Co-operate with us and you will get more money for your butterfat. In this way only we will get a 92-scoring butter.

but a thousand dollars worth of farm tools exposed to rain and snow

Farmers lose large sums of money each year because farm machinery is not properly cared for. Rust and rot cause rapid deterioration of implements. They shorten their period of service and thus reduce your profits.

These losses can be decreased by housing your machinery when not in use in a modern machine shed. Your increased profits, due to the longer life and greater efficiency of your farm tools, will soon pay the cost of constructing such a shelter.

Besides protecting your implements, the building can also provide you with room for a machine shop or tractor garage in which you can do necessary repair work on rainy days. The space upstairs can be used for storage purposes.

Drop in today and let us show you how inexpensive such a profit-making improvement on your farm really is.

THE ONLY "SURE THING" IN THE INVESTMENT FIELD

The Advice of Honest Men Who Know, and Willingness to Be Content With Reasonable Return, Declared Only Safe Road to Assured Income.

"Success in life depends upon the investments made of talents and time," says an article on investing prepared by the Committee on Public Education of the American Bankers Association. "Future return will be gain or loss, according to these investments. That is a law of life which controls investment of money, just as it controls investment of talents." The article, which is particularly timely in these days when so many are being robbed by fake investments, continues:

In the business sense, the word investment relates to the use of money in acquiring ownership of property. Ownership may represent entire possession of property as of a home; partial ownership as holding stock in a corporation; or conditional ownership as in the case of buying a mortgage or a bond. When a person makes an investment in bonds, he is really loaning his money to the government or corporation issuing them. He will receive the interest which they earn as long as he owns them, or, until they are paid off.

Ownership of great corporations is vested in individuals who have invested money in their stock or bonds. Many people regard the ownership of the United States Steel Corporation, for example, as differing from the ownership of, say, a small workshop. Yet investors in shares of Steel Corporation stock are entitled to the same rights, under the law, as the owner of the workshop. In the corporation, the owners hold certificates of stock as evidence of their investment, whereas the owner of the little workshop holds a deed as title to his land.

Capitalistic Laws Protect Investors

Because the laws stand for the equal protection of all investors, it is possible and profitable to make good investments. It gives an incentive to work hard and to invest. The person who wishes to invest must first work and accumulate funds with which to do so.

Bonds are always secured by mortgages on the lands, buildings or other property of the corporation for which the money has been used. When a bond matures the money must be repaid to the owner of the bond.

All investors are a part of a great financial system which gathers up and puts to work the wealth of the country for the mutual benefit, prosperity, and well-being of all. In America, it is possible for any one who is willing to pay the price of self-denial and hard work, to be an investor. Good investments made in early life by saving such small sums as may be possible, lay the foundation for providing the comforts of later years, when it is harder to earn a livelihood and when poverty often becomes the condition of those who have not practiced thrift in youth.

It is not wise for those without experience to undertake to make investments of their money without guidance by those who know. Many companies are constantly being organized to promote unsound schemes, referred to as "wild-cat." There are always solicitors ready to relieve people of their savings by the promise of big returns. The lure of great wealth is always a temptation by which thousands of thrifty people are deprived of hard-earned savings every year. Widows and orphans who have inherited money are frequently sought and made the targets of these fake-stock salesmen. Misery and suffering are the usual results.

Greed Defeats Safety

Many people with small means also lose money because they insist on a high rate of interest on their investments. Safety of principal should be considered above large returns in interest or dividends. Small investors should never buy high-rate, speculative investments, in which there is a great risk, but should stick to those which pay a fair rate and which are known to be safe.

To know whether an investment is worth buying the investor should go to a banker, or a successful business man in whom he has confidence, get his opinion and act in accordance with it. In all probability this will mean the difference between successful investment and total loss of his money.

The banker deals with investments every day and desires to give all the help and information he can, and the business man has learned by experience the need of caution and careful judgment. They believe one should have a clear understanding of an investment before it is purchased. They know the need for avoiding stock promotion schemes and get-rich-quick propositions which in many cases have brought poverty and suffering. While many states have passed laws aimed to protect the public against promoters of fake investments, thousands of people annually fall victims to their wiles, because they fail to seek advice of those experienced in making investments.

Good advice and temperate expectations mark the only road to safe investment and an assured income. There is no other certain way.

Dynamite Fishing

Two young men while fishing near Melbourne, Australia, recently tried to set off a bottle of dynamite and kill scores of fish. They forgot to put a weight on the bottle and their dog jumped in after it. As the fuse was slowly burning down the fishermen started to run, but the faster they ran the faster the dog and dynamite came after them. The bottle exploded about 25 feet from them and the dog disappeared.

Great Mural Painter

It is said of Edwin Blashfield that, as a mural painter, he is represented on more walls than any other artist in this country. Two beautiful examples of his work are in the library of congress, Washington. His painting in the lantern is called "Intelligence Unveiled." The collar decoration has for its theme the 12 great periods in the development of civilization.

Seen From the Country

When one gets a run of hard luck or meets disaster of one sort or another in the "home district" his friends and neighbors are eager and ready to help to the limit of their power. When one meets a similar run of hardship in the city he is down and out the moment his funds are exhausted.—Chauvin Chronicle.

Hedgehog and Porcupine

Strictly speaking, the hedgehog is a small insectivorous animal of nocturnal habits which lives in the Old world. There is no true hedgehog in the United States, but the American porcupine is popularly called hedgehog. So in this country "hedgehog" and "porcupine" refer to the same animal.

Definite Wage Term

"Minimum wage" is a term employed to indicate the lowest level of earnings for a given class of laborers, which will afford them and their natural dependents a means of existence adequate to maintain them in full physical efficiency and social decency.

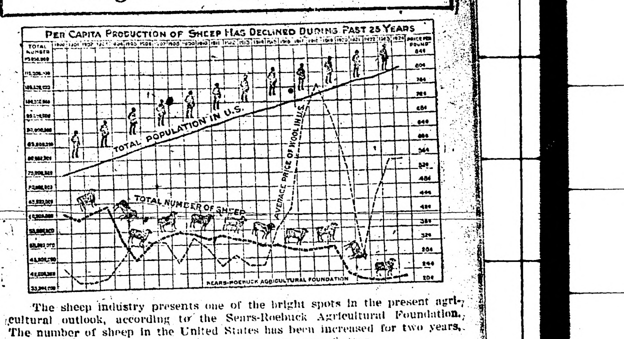
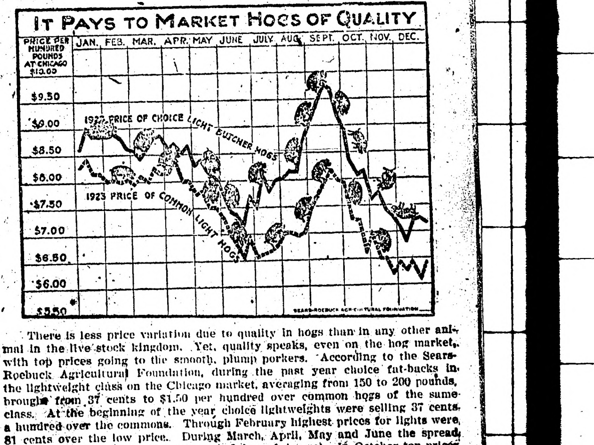
Bright Outlook for Sheep



The sheep industry presents one of the bright spots in the present agricultural outlook, according to the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation. The number of sheep in the United States has been increased for two years, but is still far from being back at wartime or pre-war figures.

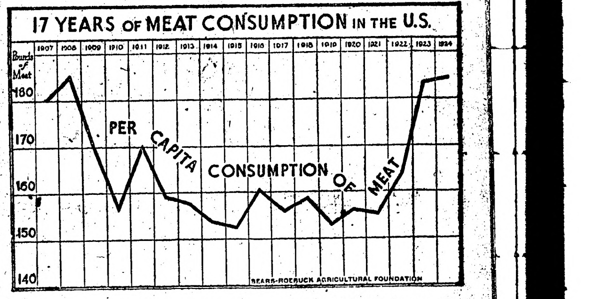
The United States produces only about 10 per cent of the world's total wool crop, but consumes 25 per cent of it. World carry-over stocks of wool have been shrinking for four years and are now low. World production last year was 66 million pounds below the previous year.

The prices of both wool and lambs have been strong the past two years, and the outlook for reasonable profits in sheep is excellent for several years to come.



There is less price variation due to quality in hogs than in any other animal in the live stock kingdom. Yet, quality speaks, even on the hog market, with top prices going to the smooth, plump porkers. According to the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation, during the past year choice fat-backs in the lightweight class on the Chicago market, averaging from 150 to 200 pounds, brought from 37 cents to $1.50 per hundred over common hogs of the same class. At the beginning of the year choice lightweights were selling 37 cents a hundred over the commons. Through February highest prices for lights were 81 cents over the low price. During March, April, May and June the spread narrowed only to widen again through July and August. In October top prices in the lightweight class were hovering around $10.00 while low quotations were two dollars less per hundred.

Butcher and bacon hogs are graded as choice, good and medium in the heavyweights, and choice, good, medium and common in other weights. Formerly there existed a grade known as prime, which possessed the maximum of condition, form and quality. At present it is extremely difficult to get this grade in the desired market weights. Choice hogs have the conformation and quality that are desired in prime hogs, but are not quite so well finished. Good pure bred sires are relatively cheap now and their use would insure higher quality litters next spring.



More meat and lard was consumed per capita in 1923 than in any other year since 1908. This increase in consumption was primarily in pork and lard. According to the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation, in addition to providing the amount needed for domestic consumption, enough meat and lard was produced to export over two billion pounds, which is equivalent to about 18 pounds more per capita. As pork production is now being curtailed, the 1924 figure of meat consumption is not likely to be equaled in 1925.

Mammoth Locomotive Hauls 4,000 Tons of Apples Setting Tonnage Record with Speed Mark Thrown In St. Paul, Minn.—Superintendent Jim Doyle of The Great Northern Railway's Spokane and Marue Divisions, chalked up a new tonnage and time record for the Wenatchee (Columbia River) and Spokane run when one of the new Santa Fe type oil-burning locomotives recently purchased by the Great Northern hauled more than 4,000 tons of Wenatchee apples over that portion of the line in 9 hours and 30 minutes. Ordinary tonnage for these divisions has been 2,400 tons.

This type of mammoth locomotive has a "booster" unit enabling it to add more than 11,000 pounds to its tractive effort. This is the secret of its great tonnage capacity. These locomotives are the largest two-cylinder models in the world. They each weigh 702,750 pounds and have a total tractive power of 98,629 pounds, which means that if hitched to a 20-story building they probably could drag it from its foundation. The drive wheels are 63 inches in diameter, (higher than a six foot man) and the cylinders are 31x32 inches.

Starboard.

The word starboard is probably derived from steer board, and became identified with the side of the ship to the right of a person at the steer board and facing the bow. The word larboard was used to designate the side to the left. This term has been superseded by the word port, in order to avoid the confusion caused by the similarity of names.

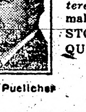
WHY BANKS?

LESSON II

By J. H. PUELICHER, Chairman,
Committee on Public Education, American Bankers Association.



J. H. Puelicher

Why does Government charter banks,—simply to make money for stockholders, or because banks are needed by the public? What is a bank? Text books say, "A bank is a quasi-public corporation, chartered by State or Nation, to receive deposits and make loans."

STOCKHOLDERS = owners.

QUASI-PUBLIC = semi-public,—that is, owned by private stockholders, but regulated by government to see that the depositors' money is safely loaned.

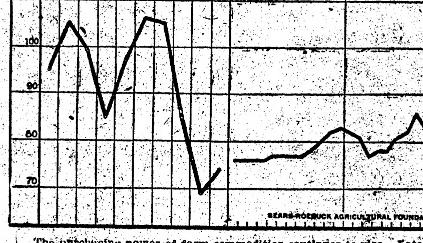
STATE BANK CHARTER = privilege, grant or right to do a banking business under supervision of the State Banking Commissioner.

NATIONAL BANK CHARTER = grant to do business under supervision of the Federal Comptroller of the Currency.

SUPERVISION = the sending by government of examiners, at least once a year, into a bank without notice, to count its cash, examine its loans, bonds and mortgages, and see if its books are correct.

Banks can do only those things permitted in their charters. No business is more closely watched and regulated by State or Nation. Banks cannot, therefore, be run simply to make money for stockholders, but are chartered to meet the needs of the people and are held to that purpose by government supervision.

Buying Power of the Farmer



The purchasing power of farm commodities continues to rise. Latest estimates show an average of 4.8 points higher for the first eleven months of this year than during the corresponding months of 1923, according to a report of the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation, based on the new index numbers of farm prices prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.

Farm prices [illegible] of 150 on November 1, 1924, as compared with 100 in 1913, [illegible] combined index [illegible] farm commodities which represent more than 90 per cent of the [illegible] sold by farms, the Foundation points out. [illegible] In 1918 the purchasing power was 10[illegible], decreasing to [illegible] 1921. In 1922 it rose to 74 and by 1923 the average stood at 78. [illegible] this year the purchasing power of farm commodities [illegible] as compared with 77.5 in the [illegible] a year ago.

[illegible] cent, have been [illegible] factors in the [illegible] purchasing power since 1921. [illegible] received during the early part of this year prices about 10 per cent above the [illegible]. This had risen to 30 per cent increase by July. At the same time the general price level of commodities the farmer has to buy [illegible] per cent above the 1913 level.

Chinese hens are laying millions of dozens [illegible] into American cakes and candies, in spite of the [illegible] tariff wall. Enough Chinese eggs are coming [illegible] to furnish approximately one dozen for every family. But the Chinese hen does not compete with the American hen in supplying the eggs for the breakfast table. Of the 23,710,000 dozen coming in last year practically all were in the dried or frozen form, according to the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation.

The American hen cannot be accused of loafing on the job. In addition to furnishing all the eggs needed for American use, she produces a huge surplus for export. Last year this surplus amounted to 30,000,000 dozen—6,290,000 dozen more than were imported. The American exports were largely eggs in the shell, which sell at higher prices than the frozen and dried eggs from China.

In 1914, just a decade ago, there were 19,000,000 dozen Chinese eggs imported. By 1918 the imports totaled 53,400,000 dozen, and in 1920 the number had climbed to 71,800,000 dozen. In 1922, the year the tariff went into effect, only 26,827,000 dozen were imported. Last year the number was still further reduced, with only 23,710,000 dozen coming in.

Present prices are not especially attractive to imports. The demand is for strictly high quality eggs, the production of which for the home market the American hen monopolizes.

Indians Come to Civilization to Learn From White Man

St. Paul, Minn., June 6—A group of the most intelligent of the Blackfeet tribe of Indians is attending the Northwest Industrial exposition in St. Paul this week as a means of adding inspiration to their own five-year course of industrial training which they are undergoing, under the supervision of Supt. Campbell on the Glacier National Park reservation. While their course is combined with agriculture, they will carry back to Montana with them a composite picture of the white man's achievement in industry that ought to add telling impetus to the efforts of their tribe, government officials believe.

The outstandidg feature of the participation of these Indians in the great industrial show of the Pale Face world is that they are paying their way in the form of entertainment, offering not only their own industrial exhibition, but giving tribal war dances, songs, etc., for the edification of the daily throngs. During the week of the Exposition they are living in a tepee village set up in an enclosure adjacent to the Overland Buildings.

Local Marine On Pacific Battleship

Washington, June 8. — How it feels to tread the deck of a battle ship afloat on the Pacific is rapidly becoming a familiar sensation to William Oscar Smith, of Holt, who is a member of the U. S. Marine detachment on the U. S. S. West Virginia, according to a recent list of Marines serving aboard that vessel.

For weeks the West Virginia has been cruising about in the vicinity of the Hawaiian Islands, where the huge Pacific Fleet has been engaged in maneuvers. According to recent dispatches the vessel will anchor at Hilo late this month, affording the Marines an opportunity to visit the volcano Kilauea, one of the chief points of interest in the Hawaiian group.

William, who is a native of Holt, lived at the home of his mother, Mrs. Emily Smith, rural route 1, before he joined the Marine Corps at Chicago several months ago. He was assigned to duty at Parris Island, S. C., and later was detailed for duty with the Marines on the West Virginia.

In King Tut's Time.

Folks in King Tut's time were not so slow. Carl Mitman, in cataloguing the ship models in his department of the Smithsonian Institution, points out that Egyptians built boat hulls of the correct form for speed nearly 4,000 years before modern scientific designers arrived at the same conclusions. Vikings had the right idea and Malay pirates had the waveline theory of construction down to perfection when English and American sailboats were clumsy tubs.

Man Goes Over Water Falls And Lives

John, the twenty-two-year-old son of A. C. Dillon of Spooner, had an almost miraculous escape from death Thursday morning, when he went over the falls at Clementson, which had been swollen into a raging torrent by the recent heavy rains. As it was, he had two ribs broken, and there is hardly an inch of his body that hasn't a bruise. He wasbrot to town where his painful injuries were attended to. He will be a very sore boy for some days, but no serious consequences are anticipated. He was helping to move the log jam above the Clementson bridge, when he missed his footing and fell into the roaring water. He went over the falls, and how he excaped death by being dashed against the rocks or being struck with a log is a mystery. He was rescued a hundred yards below the falls in an exhausted condition and taken to shore, where he was given first-aid treatment and rushed to town. The falls, with the present high stage of water, is a regular torrent, and John considers himself a very lucky boy to go thru the experiance and live.– Baudette Region.

Carlson Mercantile Company says,

NO MATTER what anyone may claim, there is only one speed at which a cream separator should be turned in order to get all the cream and cream of uniform thickness.

That's the speed plainly indicated on the crank of every separator, of whatever make.

Every De Laval now has a Bell Speed-Indicator. The bell warns the operator if the separator is turned too slowly. There can be no mistake about it.

COOLIDGE ATTENDS NORSE GATHERING

Failure of Los Angeles To Complete Trip Disappoints Thousands Attending Greatest Gathering of 1925.

St. Paul—Calvin Coolidge, the Nation's chief executive and Mrs. Coolidge arrived in St. Paul to attend the Norse-American Centennial and were greeted by literally tens of thousands of cheering citizens, anxious to do them honor.

From the time they alighted from their special train in the St. Paul union station and went into the home of Secretary of State Frank B. Kellogg, they were made aware of the warmth of their welcome on the part of the northwest.

Los Angeles Abandons Trip.

Turned back in its course by high and shifting winds and thunder storms gathering in the middle west, and with its engines in trouble, the dirigible Los Angeles, was forced Sunday afternoon to abandon its trip. The giant airship had been sailing with no reports of trouble until it reached the outskirts of Cleveland, Ohio. There it dropped several messages and turned toward an easterly direction.

These messages said the dirigible had been turned back because of engine trouble, and feared going into the storm in its condition.

King Sends Greetings.

Greetings from King Haakon VII of Norway, from members of his official family, and from representatives of various organizations, were extended to the Norwegians of America at the Norse Guests' session of the Norse-American centennial celebration in the grandstand, Sunday afternoon.

It was estimated that 15,000 people jammed the stands to hear the message of felicitation from the king and to participate in the singing of the Norse national anthem. The message from King Haakon VII was voiced by H. Bryn, Norway's minister to the United States.

Thousands Attend Centennial.

Hundreds of cities and villages in the northwest were "deserted villages," their population gone, in a great exodus of modern times, when Norwegians of the new world poured into the Twin Cities for their anniversary celebration, in the greatest convention scheduled anywhere in the world in 1925.

Minneapolis and St. Paul became joint hosts to these thousands, ready to welcome men and women who are proud to be Norsemen, gathered to celebrate the progress of 100 years, since the day when a little sloop dared the hazards of an Atlantic voyage to bring settlers to America and began the great tidal wave of Norse immigration.

And the guests came in amazing numbers, from every corner of the United States and Canada, from Norway as well—because never in the history of the Norse race has there been so much to bring them all together at the same time.

Thousands came for annual meetings of bygdelags. Other thousands came for church conventions, representing 2,700 congregations. Others were attracted by the brilliant air carnival, offered as an attraction, and still others were here because of an elaborate sports program.

'MANEUVERS SUCCESS,' HINES

Chief of Staff Considers Exercises Worth Expense and Effort.

Washington—In his first official statement since returning to Washington, Major General John L. Hines, chief of staff of the army and one of the principal umpires during the Hawaiian maneuvers, declared that the exercises were highly successful and well worth the expense and effort involved.

Analyzing the exercises, he declared that the principal results and conclusions were:

That the project and plans for the defenses of Oahu have been tested and that the deficiencies therein have been disclosed.

That very valuable training has been given the army and navy in joint operation.

SPANISH JOIN WITH FRENCH

Landing Troops on North Coast Expected After Naval Bombardment.

Handaye, Franco-Spanish Frontier—Spain, according to advices reaching here, is about to attack the Riffians again.

Spain, it is said, will back up France's advance on Abdel Krim by landing forces at Alhucimas bay, on the north coast of the Riff front. It was said the French and Spanish boats would join in this naval action, thus enabling a bombardment from the water, followed by putting men ashore.

Loeb Goes Insane in Prison

Joliet, Ill.—Richard A. Loeb, one of the slayers of Bobby Franks, is insane. His condition was brought about by nine months of confinement in the Joliet state penitentiary superinduced by a severe attack of measles. This is the official statement given out by Warden John L. Whitman at the state institution following reports from two physicians and two alienists who have had the youthful killer under observation since he became delirious.

CALVIN COOLIDGE

The President, accompanied by Mrs. Coolidge and Secretary of State Frank B. Kellogg came from Washington in a special train to participate in the celebration of the Norwegian-American centennial at the Minnesota State Fair grounds.

CHINESE REVOLT GROWS

300 Additional American Marines Landed—More Warships Needed, Says Consul.

Washington — Four foreigners have been killed in Shanghai, where American residents have been forced to arm themselves against attacks by Chinese student-sympathizers of strikers from Japanese mills, according to cable dispatches.

Three hundred more United States Marines have been ordered to Shanghai, in addition to two gunboats now enroute to China from Manila. More war ships are necessary, Consul Gene Cunningham at Shanghai, declared.

Other developments were:

Two British cruisers, with 600 men arrived at Shanghai. Two thousand British bluejackets have been landed so far.

The British government views the uprisings in China with growing concern, fearing a rebellion similar to the Boxer uprising.

JACOBS GIVEN SIXTY DAYS

Offer of Retraction Fails in Defense Plea for Leniency.

Minneapolis—A. N. Jacobs, author of the "Magnus Johnson Steps Out" article, for the publication of which he was convicted on a charge of criminal libel by a jury in district court May 2, was sentenced to a 60-day workhouse term by Judge Nye. The court granted a 20-day stay in which to file a motion for a new trial.

Petitions for leniency and a request for the minimum sentence, signed by some members of the jury which convicted him, were presented by the defense when Jacobs was called before the court.

OFFENSIVE ON RUM PROMISED

Blockade Merely Preliminary Skirmish, Says Chief, Planning Attack.

Washington — The coast guard, like John Paul Jones, has not yet begun to fight in its war on the rum smugglers.

The blockade of Rum Row off the Atlantic coast by the guard, says Assistant Secretary Andrews of the treasury, field marshal of prohibition forces, is merely a skirmish to establish contact with the enemy. The real battle, an enveloping offensive against the liquor fleets, soon will begin, he indicated.

FRENCH SEEK TIME ON DEBT

Caillaux Would Await New Fiscal Reforms Before Settlement.

Paris — Considerable progress has been made by Foreign Minister Briand and Finance Minister Caillaux in the drafting of tentative outlines for the settlement of the French debt to the United States. Ambassador Herrick has conferred several times with Quai d'Orsay and the finance ministry, and he has transmitted various proposals to Washington, keeping the state department and the congressional committee informed as to what is going on.

HOOVER GETS MINES BUREAU

Transfer From Interior to Commerce Department Effective July 1.

Washington—Transfer of the bureau of mines from the interior department to the department of commerce has been decided upon.

Attorney General Sargent has ruled the tarnsfer can be made by executive order, and action was agreed upon at a conference between President Coolidge and Secretaries Work and Hoover.

China to Declare Martial Law

Berlin — The foreign office is advised by Dr. Boye, the German minister at Peking, that neither German subjects nor interests have been endangered by the disturbances in China.

The diplomatic corps, he reported, intended to make a conciliatory reply to the note from the Chinese government protesting against the measures taken by the powers at Shanghai. The Chinese government plans to send an investigating committee to Shanghai and to declare martial law in Peking.

RIFFIANS ATTACK FRENCH FRONT

Tribe Shock Troops Are Moved Down in Savage All Day Battle.

Paris — The Riffian tribesmen have launched the strongest and best organized offensive since their invasion of French Morocco with a drive against Taounat, in the middle of the front.

Official reports say Abdel Krim's men temporarily gained some ground, crossing the Ouergha river at several points, but were repelled by the French.

The Riffian offensive was conducted with the greatest fierceness the tribesmen have yet shown. Abdel Krim used Riffian regulars, his best shock troops, in the attacks, but the French declare they were mowed down by machine-gun fire and that their losses were extremely heavy.

The Riffians used no artillery, but their forces were larger than in any previous operation of the campaign.

UPHOLDS OUTSIDE BUYERS

Clause Which Aims at Third Party Dealer Is Declared Invalid.

St. Paul—On the ground that it "infringes the liberty of contract," section 27 of the Minnesota co-operative law prohibiting their parties from purchasing or handling products of persons under contract with co-operative organizations in the state was held unconstitutional by the state supreme court.

As the court recently upheld the validity of the co-operative contract the decision brings about the situation whereby it is not illegal for the outsider to buy the products of a member of a co-operative organization, but is illegal for the contract holder to sell to such parties. The $500 penalty for third parties who attempted to buy commodities from persons having co-operative contracts is knocked out by the decision.

NEW NOTE CITES 13 FAILURES

Demands Suppression of General Staff, Reduction of Police.

London — Germany has failed in thirteen conditions to comply with the disarmament requirements of the Versailles treaty, declares the allied note to Germany, the text of which was given out here.

In order to obtain the evacuation of the Cologne area, Germany must, among other things, suppress the present general staff and reduce the number of German police from 180,000 to 150,000.

"The military character presented by the German security police must entirely disappear," says the note.

MITCHELL NAMED SOLICITOR

Former Law Partner of Judge Butler to Take Office Immediately.

Mr. Mitchell, a former law partner of Associate Justice Pierce Butler of the supreme court, succeeds James M. Beck, whose resignation was announced several weeks ago. Mr. Mitchell was recommended by Senator William Brooks of Minneapolis, Republican national committeeman, and by Senator Schall, Republican of Minnesota. Indorsements also were received at the White House from many others prominent in Minnesota political life.

THOS. MARSHALL IS BURIED

War Vice President Laid to Rest in Simple Service at Indianapolis.

Indianapolis, Ind. — The body of Thomas Riley Marshall, whose gentle appeals for more kindliness and toleration endeared him to the nation lies in the same crematory wherein rests the body of James Whitcomb Riley, another Hoosier who touched American hearts through his poems of homely strains. Both men gifted in the art of weaving words into expressions of wholesome sentiments lie not far apart on the rolling slopes of Crown hill.

EARLY SETTLEMENT SEEN

German President Silent on Allies' Proposal to Destroy Munitions.

Berlin—The Allies' purely military demands in their disarmament note to Germany can be swiftly adjusted, in the opinion of President Hindenburg. His intimate friends know this to be his view after keeping silent heretofore on the evacuation of Cologne with German fulfilment of the disarmament demands.

Soviet Active in China

Washington — Official reports from Consul General Cunningham at Shanghai, telling of the discovery there of further evidence of Bolshevistic agitation in the stirring up of the students' strike, added to the concern felt in Washington over the growth in the last few days of the anti-foreign movement in Chinese cities. The department also received from Vice Consul Meinhardt, at Changsha, word that the students in all schools there were on sympathetic strike because of the Shanghai developments.

LABOR SAVING EQUIPMENT

It is not extravagance to purchase good household equipment. The housemother is the most valuable of human machinery and will wear out if not carefully saved from overwork. Machinery can be replaced, but a mother, never.

A good rule to observe in purchasing labor-saving devices is to give preference to those which are oftenest used and most necessary. A cherry-pitter is a great convenience if one puts up many cherries; but it is used only a short season, while a meat grinder, used nearly every day, is a necessary utensil.

Women who make large quantities of bread find the bread-mixer a necessity, while the washing machine saves bodily energy and time; it, too, is a labor-saver.

The question of space, as well as the amount of care and expense needed to operate them, is a point to consider.

The price is not always high for artistic china; the color and design may be good, though cheap. Dishes light, easy to handle, are best. Aluminum is one of the best; not difficult to keep bright and very sanitary.

In choice of furniture the best includes convenience, necessity and beauty; when it includes all three it will serve its purpose efficiently.

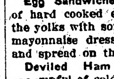
Taste may be good or bad, but the ordinary individual with a little study will learn what is best to buy for her station in life—things which "go" with, or correspond to, the general furnishings.

We must not forget that a very important point in equipment, especially dishes and cooking utensils, is beauty. A thing may be useful and beautiful, too.

The housekeeper (who has little help) is wise who avoids bric-a-brac and carved furniture, elaborate linen which requires labor and skill to launder.

Place equipment conveniently for step-saving. Have the kitchen stove and sink, table and cupboards within a reasonable space. See that the sink is set high enough so that there will be no back-breaking aches after an hour of dish washing. The table, too, should be of such a height that the body need not lean in working at it. There are few homes which cannot be improved by a little study, observation and common sense in planning, equipment, arrangement.

Some Sandwiches.



Bread should not be too fresh to cut well; let the slices lie as cut, matching the slices. For a nice sandwich the crusts should be removed and the sandwiches may be shaped after they are prepared. Cream the butter to soften so that it will spread better, then add any filling desired.

Egg Sandwiches.—Chop the whites of hard cooked eggs until fine. Mix the yolks with softened butter or with mayonnaise dressing, add the whites and spread on the buttered bread.

Deviled Ham Sandwiches.—Take one cupful of cold boiled ham chopped fine, rub the yolks of two hard cooked eggs until smooth with three teaspoonfuls of melted butter, mix the ham with a teaspoonful of lemon juice and one-fourth teaspoonful of mustard, season to taste and mix all together. Spread on thin slices of buttered bread.

Cheese Sandwiches.—Grate cheese fine, mix with cream or melted butter, add salt and cayenne, and spread on buttered bread.

Water cress and lettuce are both very good in sandwiches; shred both, mix with mayonnaise dressing and place on buttered bread. Scraped onion for flavor may be added.

Chopped green peppers and onion mixed with mayonnaise makes another appetizing salad.

Sweet Sandwiches.—Chopped blanched almonds with scraped maple sugar, softened with cream. Marmalade, jelly or preserves, any of which will spread without running. Cottage cheese and chopped preserved cherries.

Salmon Sandwiches.—Shred a cupful of salmon, add a tablespoonful of chopped capers, a tablespoonful of chopped sour pickles and four tablespoonfuls of mayonnaise. Cut into shapes and wrap each in waxed paper.

Bacon and Egg Sandwiches.—Chop as many hard-cooked eggs as will be needed, adding a tablespoonful of mayonnaise for each egg. Spread on buttered bread and top with a thin slice of cooked bacon. Cover with another slice of bread and wrap in paraffin paper.

The words, spoken in their sweet clear voices, fell nonchalantly from their pretty lips. All very fearless and uninhibited and free. That, they told you, was the main thing. Sometimes Dirk wished they wouldn't work so hard at their play. They were forever getting up pageants and plays and large festivals for charity; Venetian fetes, Oriental bazaars, charity balls. In the programme performance of these many of them sang better, acted better, danced better than most professional performers, but the whole thing always lacked the flavor, somehow, of professional performance. On these affairs they lavished thousands in costumes and decorations, receiving in return other thousands which they soberly turned over to the cause. They found nothing ludicrous in this. Spasmodically they went into business or semi-professional ventures, defying the conventions. Paula did this, too. She or one of her friends were forever opening blouse shops; starting Gifte Shoppes; burgeoning into tea rooms decorated in crude green and vermilion and orange and black; announcing their affiliation with an advertising agency. These adventures blossomed, withered, died. They were the result of post-war restlessness. Many of these girls had worked indefatigably during the 1917-1918 period; had driven service cars, managed ambulances, nursed, scrubbed, conducted canteens. They missed the excitement, the satisfaction of achievement.

They found Dirk fair game, resented Paula's proprietorship. Susans and Janes and Kates and Bettys and Sallys—plain old-fashioned names for modern, erotic misses—they talked to Dirk, danced with him, rode with him, flirted with him. His very unattainableness gave him piquancy. That Paula Storm had him fast. He didn't care a hoot about girls.

"Oh, Mr. DeJong," they said, "your name's Dirk, isn't it? What a slick name! What does it mean?"

"Nothing, I suppose. It's a Dutch name. My people—my father's people—were Dutch, you know."

"A dirk's a sort of sword, isn't it, or poniard? Anyway, it sounds very keen and cruel and fatal—Dirk."

He would flush a little (one of his assets) and smile, and look at them, and say nothing. He found that to be all that was necessary.

He got on enormously.

Between the girls he met in society and the girls that worked in his office there existed a similarity that struck and amused Dirk. He said, "Take a letter, Miss Roach," to a slim young creature as exquisite as the girl with whom he had danced the day before; or ridden or played tennis or bridge. Their very clothes were faultless imitations. They even used the same perfume. He wondered, idly, how they did it. They were eighteen, nineteen, twenty, and their faces and bodies and desires and natural equipment made their presence in a business office a paradox, an absurdity. Yet they were capable, too, in a mechanical sort of way. Theirs were mechanical jobs. They were lovely creatures with the minds of fourteen-year-old children. Their hair was shining, perfectly undulated, as fine and glossy and tenderly curling as a young child's. Their breasts were flat, their figures singularly sexless like that of a very young boy. They were wise with the wisdom of the serpent. Their legs were slim and sturdy. Their mouths were pouting, soft, pink, the lower lip a little curled back, petal-wise, like the moist mouth of a baby that has just finished nursing. Their eyes were wide apart, empty, knowledgeous. They managed their private affairs like generals. They were cool, remote, disdainful. They reduced their boys to desperation. They were brigands, desperadoes, pirates, taking all, giving little. They came, for the most part, from sordid homes, yet they knew, in some miraculous way, all the fine arts that Paula knew and practiced. They were corsetless, pliant, bewildering, lovely, dangerous.

Among them Dirk worked immune, aloof, untouched. He would have been surprised to learn that he was known among them as Frosty. They admired and resented him. Not one that did not secretly dream of the day when he would call her into his office, shut the door and say, "Loretta" (their names were burbankian monstrosities, born of grafting the original appellation onto their own idea of beauty in nomenclature — hence Loretta, Imogene, Nadine, Natalie, Ardella), "Loretta, I have watched you for a long, long time and you must have noticed how deeply I admire you."

It wasn't impossible. Those things happen. The movies had taught them that. Dirk, all unconscious of their pitiless all-absorbing scrutiny, would have been still further appalled to learn how fully aware they were of his personal and private affairs. They knew about Paula, for example. They admired and resented her, too. They despised her for the way in which she openly displayed her feeling for him (how they knew this was a miracle and a mystery, for she almost never came into the office and disguised all her telephone talks with him). They thought he was grand to his mother. Selina had been in his office twice, perhaps. On one of these occasions she had spent five minutes chatting sociably with Ethelinda Quinn, who had the face of a Da Vinci cherub and the soul of a man-eating shark.

Selina always talked to [illegible] She enjoyed listening to street car conductors, washwomen, janitors, landladies, clerks, doormen, chauffeurs, policemen. Something about her made them talk. They opened to her as flowers to the sun. They sensed her interest, her liking. As they talked Selina would exclaim, "You don't say! Well, that terrible!" Her eyes would be bright with sympathy.

Selina had said, on entering Dirk's office, "My land! I don't see how you can work among those pretty creatures and not be a sultan. I'm going to ask some of them down to the farm over Sunday."

"Don't, Mother! They wouldn't understand. I scarcely see them. They're just part of the office equipment."

Afterward, Ethelinda Quinn had passed expert opinion. "Say, she's got ten times the guts that Frosty's got. I like her fine. Did you see her terrible hat! But say, it didn't look funny on her, did it? Anybody else in that getup would look comical, but she's the kind that could walk off with anything. I don't know. She's got what I call an air. It beats style. Nice, too. She said I was a pretty little thing. Can you beat it! At that she's right. I cer'nly yam."

All unconscious, "Take a letter, Miss Quinn," said Dirk half an hour later.

In the midst of this fiery furnace of femininity Dirk walked unscorched. Paula, the North shore girls, well-bred and professional business women he occasionally met in the course of business, the enticing little nymphs he encountered in his own office, all practiced on him their warm and perfumed wiles. He moved among them cool and serene. Perhaps his sudden success had had something to do with this; and his quiet ambition for further success. For he really was accounted successful now, even in the spectacular whirl of Chicago's meteoric financial constellation. North-side mammas regarded his income, his career, and his future with eyes of respect and wily speculation. There was always a neat little pile of invitations in the mail that lay on the correct little console in the correct little apartment ministered by the correct little Jap on the correct North-side street near (but not too near) the lake, and overlooking it.

The apartment had been furnished with Paula's aid. Together she and Dirk had gone to interior decorators. "But you've got to use your own taste, too," Paula had said, "to give it the individual touch." The apartment was furnished in a good deal of Italian furniture, the finish a dark oak or walnut, the whole massive and yet somehow unconvincing. The effect was somber without being impressive. There were long carved tables on which an ash tray seemed a desecration; great chairs roomy enough for lolling, yet in which you did not relax; dull silver candlesticks; vestments; Dante's saturnine features sneering down upon you from a correct cabinet. There were not many books. Tiny foyer, large living-room, bedroom, dining-room, kitchen, and a cubby-hole for the Jap.

Dirk did not spend much of his time in the place. His upward climb was a treadmill, really. His office, the apartment, a dinner, a dance. His contacts were monotonous, and too few.

His office was a great splendid office in a great splendid office building in LaSalle street. He drove back and forth in a motor car along the boulevards. His social engagements lay north. LaSalle street bounded him on the west, Lake Michigan on the east, Jackson boulevard on the south, Lake Forest on the north. He might have lived a thousand miles away for all he knew of the rest of Chicago—the mighty, roaring, sweltering, pushing, screaming, magnificent hideous steel giant that was Chicago.

Selina had had no hand in the furnishing of his apartment. When it was finished Dirk had brought her in triumph to see it. "Well," he had said, "what do you think of it, Mother?"

She had stood in the center of the room, a small plain figure in the midst of these massive somber carved tables, chairs, chests. A little smile had quirked the corner of her mouth. "I think it's as cosy as a cathedral."

Sometimes Selina remonstrated with him, though of late she had taken on a strange reticence. She no longer asked him about the furnishings of the houses he visited, or the exotic food he ate at splendid dinners. The farm flourished. The great steel mills and factories to the south were closing in upon her but had not yet set iron foot on her rich green acres. She was rather famous now for the quality of her farm products and her pens. You saw "DeJong asparagus" on the menu at the Blackstone and the Drake hotels. Sometimes Dirk's friends twitted him about this and he did not always acknowledge that the similarity of names was not a coincidence.

"Dirk, you seem to see no one but just these people," Selina told him in one of her infrequent rebukes. "You don't get the full flavor of life. You've got to have a vulgar curiosity about people and things. All kinds of people. All kinds of things. You revolve in the same little circle over and over and over."

"Haven't the [illegible] to take the time."

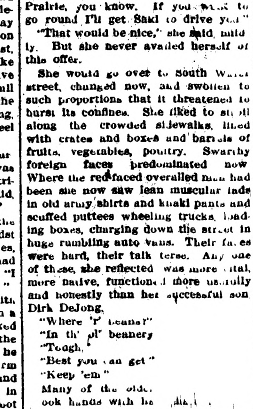
"You can [illegible]"

Sometimes Selina [illegible] for a week or ten days at a stretch, and indulged in what she called an orgy. At such times Julie Arnold would invite her to occupy one of the guest rooms at the Arnold house, or Dirk would offer her his bedroom and tell her that he would be comfortable on the big couch in the living room, or that he would take a room at the University club. She always declined. She would take a room in a hotel, sometimes north, sometimes south. Her holiday before her, she would go off roaming gaily as a small boy on a Saturday morning, with the day stretching gorgeously and adventuresomely ahead of him, sallies down the street without plan or appointment, knowing that richness in one form or another lies before him for the choosing. A sociable woman, Selina, savoring life, she liked the lights, the color, the rush, the noise. Her years of grinding work, with her face pressed down to the very soil itself, had failed to kill her zest for living. She prowled into the city's foreign quarters—Italian, Greek, Chinese, Jewish.

She loved the Michigan boulevard and State street shop windows in which haughty waxed ladies in glittering evening gowns postured, fingers elegantly crooked as they held a fan, a rose, a program, meanwhile smiling condescendingly out upon an envious world flattening its nose against the plate glass barrier.

She penetrated the Black belt, where Chicago's vast and growing negro population shifted and moved and stretched its great limbs ominously, reaching out and out in protest and overflowing the bounds that irked it. Her serene face and her quiet manner her bland interest and friendly look protected her. They thought her a social worker, perhaps; one of the uplifters. She bought and read the Independent, the negro newspaper in which herb doctors advertised magic roots. She even sent the twenty-five cents required for a box of these, charmed by their names—Adam and Eve roots, Master of the Woods, Dragon's Blood, High John the Conqueror, Jezebel Roots, Grains of Paradise.

"Look here, Mother," Dirk would protest, "you can't wander around like that. It isn't safe. This isn't High Prairie, you know. If you want to go round I'll get Saki to drive you."



She Liked to Stroll Along the Crowded Sidewalks.

"That would be nice," she said, mildly. But she never availed herself of this offer.

She would go over to South Water street, changed now, and swollen to such proportions that it threatened to burst its confines. She liked to stroll along the crowded sidewalks, lined with crates and boxes and barrels of fruits, vegetables, poultry. Swarthy foreign faces predominated now. Where the red-faced overalled men had been she now saw lean muscular lads in old army shirts and khaki pants and scuffed puttees wheeling trucks, loading boxes, charging down the street in huge rumbling auto vans. Their faces were hard, their talk terse. Any one of these, she reflected, was more vital, more native, functioned more usefully and honestly than her successful son, Dirk DeJong.

"Where 'r' beans?"

"In th' ol' beanery."

"Tough."

"Best you can get."

"Keep 'em."

Many of the older [illegible] shook hands with her [illegible] friendlily. William Tal[illegible] little more dried up, more [illegible], his sparse hair quite gray now, still leaned up against the side of his doorway in his shirt sleeves and his neat pepper-and-salt pants and vest, cigar, unlighted, in his mouth, the heavy gold watch chain spanning his middle.

"Well, you certainly made good, Mrs. DeJong. Remember the day you come here with your first load?"

Oh, yes. She remembered.

"That boy of yours has [illegible] his mark, too, I see. Doing grand, ain't he? Was a great satisfaction having a son turn out well like that. Yes, sirree! Why look at my sister Carlia."

Life at High Prairie [illegible] too. Frequently you saw [illegible] visitors there for a week or ten days, a tin[illegible] boys and girls whose city pallor gave way to a rich tan; tired-looking women with sagging figures who drank Selina's cream and ate her abundant vegetables and tender chickens as though they expected these viands to be momentarily snatched from them. Selina picked these up in odd corners of the city. Dirk protested against this, too. Selina was a member of the High Prairie school board now. She was on the Good Roads committee and the Truck Farmers' association valued her opinion. Her life was full, pleasant, prolific.

Chapter XIV

Paula had a scheme for interesting women in bond buying. It was a good scheme. She suggested it so that Dirk thought he had thought of it. Dirk was head now of the bond department in the Great Lakes Trust company's magnificent new white building on Michigan boulevard north.

Its white towers gleamed pink in the lake mists. Dirk said it was a terrible building badly proportioned, and that it looked like a vast vanilla sundae. His new private domain was more like a splendid bookless library than a business office. It was finished in rich dull walnut and there were great upholstered chairs, soft rugs, shaded lights. Special attention was paid to women clients. There was a room for their convenience fitted with low restful chairs and couches, lamps, writing desks, in mauve and rose. Paula had selected the furnishings for this room. Ten years earlier it would have been considered absurd in a suite of business offices. Now it was a routine part of the equipment.

Dirk's private office was almost as difficult of access as that of the nation's executive. Cards, telephones, office boys, secretaries stood between the caller and Dirk DeJong, head of the bond department. You asked for him, uttering his name in the ear of the six-foot statuesque detective who, in the guise of usher, stood in the center of the marble rotunda eyeing each visitor with a coldly appraising gaze. This one padded softly ahead of you on rubber heels, only to give you over to the care of a glorified office boy who took your name. You waited. He returned. You waited. Presently there appeared a young woman with inquiring eyebrows. She conversed with you. She vanished. You waited. She reappeared. You were ushered into Dirk DeJong's large and luxurious inner office. And there formality fled.

Dirk was glad to see you; quietly, interestedly glad to see you. As you stated your business he listened attentively, as was his charming way. The volume of business done with women clients by the Great Lakes Trust company was enormous. Dirk was conservative, helpful—and he always got the business. He talked little. He was amazingly effective.

Ladies in the modish black of recent bereavement made quite a somber procession to his door. His suggestions (often originating with Paula) made the Great Lakes Trust company's discreet advertising rich in results. Neat little pamphlets written for women on the subjects of saving, investments. "You are not dealing with a soulless corporation," said these brochures. "May we serve you? You need more than friends. Before acting, you should have your judgment vindicated by an organization of investment specialists. You may have relatives and friends, some of whom would gladly advise you on investments. But perhaps you rightly feel that the less they know about your financial affairs, the better. To handle trusts, and to care for the securities of widows and orphans, is our business."

It was startling to note how this sort of thing mounted into millions.

"Women are becoming more and more used to the handling of money," Paula said, shrewdly. "Pretty soon their patronage is going to be as valuable as that of men. The average woman doesn't know about bonds—about bond buying. They think they're something mysterious and risky. They ought to be educated up to it. Didn't you say something, Dirk, about classes in finance for women?"

"But would the women come?"

"Of course they'd come. W[illegible] accept any invitation that's engraved on heavy cream paper."

The Great Lakes Trust had a branch in Cleveland now, and one in New York, on Fifth avenue. The drive to interest women in bond buying and to instruct them in finance was to take on almost national proportions. There was to be newspaper and magazine advertising.

When Pedagogues K[illegible]

Scotland's army of schoolmasters in the year 1782 sent a memorial to parliament pointing out that while their average income was £13 a year that of a plowman was £14 to £16. No relief was granted until 1803, when the Schoolmasters' act was passed, and their income was legally fixed at "not under 300 merks (£16 13s. 4d) nor over 400 merks (£22 4s 6d)." The heritors had also to provide a house "which need not contain more than two rooms, including the kitchen and with ground for a garden or not more than a quarter of a Scots acre or two bolls of meal as its equivalent." They were highly indignant at being obliged to "erect palaces for dominies," but legal compulsion could no longer be ignored. Thereafter, conditions were at least good enough to prevent schoolmasters from resigning their office to become beadles, as had actually happened during the darkest days.

Let's Get a 92-Scoring Butter!

It is very important to deliver your cream twice a week in order to get a 92 scoring butter.

All our butter is scored and inspected by the Government Inspector and whatever score he places on our butter is the basis on which the Creameries Ass'n' makes payment.

Cream a week old will never make butter scoring 92 even tho it is sweet. Our biggest trouble is with old flavor which shows up in butter a week or so after it is made.

It is very encouraging the way our patrons have realized the necessity of delivering their cream twice a week yet some seem to think that as long as their cream is sweet it will make the highest grade butter.

Co-operate with us and you will get more money for your butterfat. In this way only we will get a 92-scoring butter.

but a thousand dollars worth of farm tools exposed to rain and snow

Farmers lose large sums of money each year because farm machinery is not properly cared for. Rust and rot cause rapid deterioration of implements. They shorten their period of service and thus reduce your profits.

These losses can be decreased by housing your machinery when not in use in a modern machine shed. Your increased profits, due to the longer life and greater efficiency of your farm tools, will soon pay the cost of constructing such a shelter.

Besides protecting your implements, the building can also provide you with room for a machine shop or tractor garage in which you can do necessary repair work on rainy days. The space upstairs can be used for storage purposes.

Drop in today and let us show you how inexpensive such a profit-making improvement on your frrm really is.

LIGHTNING STRIKES; WOMAN IS KILLED

The following from the Rainy River Record gives the details of the death of Mrs. Hanson, on the Ontario side of the Lake of the Woods, when lightning struck the house in which she was living.

Rainy River district was visited by a very severe thunder and lightning storm last Friday evening, great quantities of rain falling during the height of the storm.

During the worst of the storm lightning struck the home of Mrs. Brusven, of Bergland. Mrs. Brusven and five children managed to make thier escape from the burning building, but Mrs. Ingeborg Hanson, mother of Mrs. Brusven, was either struck by the lightning and killed or was unable to flee from the burning building and was burned to death. Mrs. Hanson was seventy two years of age.

VACATIONING ON OPEN ROADS

It has been estimated that 5,000,000 motor campers will traverse the highways and byways of this fair land this summer, seeking recreation and change, and that they will spend almost half a billion dollars in this quest. That is a large sum of money, but it will be spent if the vacationers get the things they seek. In spite of congested highways and traffic accidents the automobile does is greater then the trouble it causes. There is little danger of our becoming a nation of motor-nomads. There is every prospect of our gaining in health and sanity and broader outlook if we continue to take the open road for our vacations.

St. Paul Letter

Number 20.

St. Paul, Minn., June 16.—(Special Correspondence) Having recovered, in part at least, from the visit of President Coolidge and approximately 100,000 visitors to the Norse-American Centennial celebration, St. Paul is now pumping up its second wind in anticipation of the ninth annual Kiwanis International Convention which opens next Tuesday for four days.

St. Paul has been described to Kiwanians everywhere as "the southern limit of Continental Glaciation", which no doubt has some relation to the fact that one of the high spots of the convention will be plenty of skating and a hockey game right in the middle of the ordinarily hot month of June.

All the convention sessions will be held in the St. Paul Auditorium, which boasts a seating capacity, when pushed, of 10,000, and which contains a gigantic pipe organ purchased with the money donated by 30,000 St. Paul people.

If the St. Paul Kiwanians are overlooking anything in their preparations for the party, it hasn't been pointed out to them. They are planning to take care of at least 5,000 delegates who are expected to register, and several thousand guests in addition.

Those who have paid their second quarterly income tax will not enjoy what is to follow. Those who havan't any to pay won't mind it.

Figures just issued at Washington show that the average 1924 net income per capita tax return in Minnesota was $2,861.46; that the average amount of tax per return was $54.38; that the per capita net income reported for the state was $158.82, and that the per capita income tax was $2.91.

Roll those figures around the block and then decide with the rest of us that they indicate an increase in prosperity, remember always that there was a 25 per cent reduction in the rate of tax.

MAINTENANCE INDISPENSIBLE

To one driving over graveled and dirt highways on Sunday evening after maintenance men had been off the job for a day, it is very apparent that our highways cannot be neglected for any material length of time, without very soon becoming as rough and impassable as they were twenty years ago. The present system for keeping up state highways is indispensible. —Aitkin Independent-Age.

PUTTING IT STRAIGHT

The Fairmont Sentinal wants Charley Babcock crowned as governor ten years hence after he has given Minnesota the best highway system on this little round globe. Why stop with governor? Seriously, however, even the hint of political office from so enthusiastic a friend as Col. Day, will not be welcomed by the commissioner. who has one ambition, which is his 'religion, to give the people of the North Star state the best passible trunk roads at the least cost. What would suit Charley even better than to be president is to have a Minnesota legislature with sense enough to give him a chance to serve the people with greater efficiency, give them smooth and permanent roads and save them money.— St. Cloud Journal-Press.

NO MATTER what anyone may claim, there is only one speed at which a cream separator should be turned in order to get all the cream and cream of uniform thickness.

That's the speed plainly indicated on the crank of every separator, of whatever make.

Every De Laval now has a Bell Speed-Indicator. The bell warns the operator if the separator is turned too slowly. There can be no mistake about it.

WARREN S. STONE DIES IN CLEVELAND

President of Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, For Years, Succumbs.

Cleveland, Ohio—Warren Stanford Stone, 65 years old, president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and all its far reaching financial activities, died in a hospital of Bright's disease believed to have been due in part to the task of managing the organization's approximately $150,000,000 business interests.

Mr. Stone's wife was at home here when his death occurred. They had no children.

Officials of the brotherhood said that several presidents had offered Mr. Stone appointment to political offices and that he had received tentative offers to cabinet positions. All were declined to continue his work in the brotherhood.

At the triennial convention of the brotherhood here last June the convention created a new office, president of all the brotherhood's activities, and elected Mr. Stone to this position for six years.

U. S. WILL NOT JOIN PACT

Washington to Have Nothing to Do With Proposed European Treaty.

Washington — The American government, through the medium of the state department, took occasion to reiterate informally that it would not be a party to the proposed European security pact or responsible for it in any way.

The pronouncement was made to throw cold water on published reports that the United States might be asked to act as custodian of the commitments contained in the pact. It was said no such proposal had been made here and none was expected in view of the well known attitude of Washington.

MELLON TAX SLASH RECEIVED

Average Reduction of 15 Per Cent in Government Toll Foreseen.

Washington — The basis of the new Mellon plan, the tax reduction program, which the treasury department soon will submit to congress, has been concluded by government experts.

CHINESE MOBS ACTIVE

Foreign Business Establishments Are Looted and Burned Before Arrival of Troops.

London—A Shanghai dispatch to the Daily Express says that the British and Japanese consulates at Kiu-Kiang were wrecked and set on fire during serious rioting.

The British consulate's papers were saved from looters, who plundered other buildings belonging to foreign companies.

The premises of the Japanese shipping company, Nisshin Kisen Kaisha, and the buildings of Butterfield & Swire, shipping agents, were burned. Students and workmen created havoc before Chinese troops arrived and finally drove them off.

Kiu-Kiang is situated on the River Yangtse, about 142 miles from Hankow. It has a population of 60,000.

The Chinese city of Shanghai, adjoining the foreign settlements, has been taken over by troops sent from Nanking by Marshal Chang Tso-Lin, the Manchurian leader, who thus has extended his sphere of influence to the great Yangtse port, say the dispatch.

ROCHESTER FLOODED BY RAIN

Crops and Gardens Suffer Heavy Damage From Hail.

Rochester, Minn.—Sweeping over Rochester, a torrential rain storm which reached almost cloudburst proportions, followed by a terrific hail storm, caused thousands of dollars damage to crops and gardens, turned streets into racing rivers, and left the city without light or power, as the Zumbro river poured over its banks, with waters rising hourly. The storm flooded every basement in the business section. Flooded the light and power plant, plunging the city in darkness. Brought more than an inch and a half of rain in two hours. Left the ground covered with hailstones to a depth of two inches in some places. Completely tied up auto and streetcar traffic.

SURPLUS PASSES ESTIMATE

Indicates Desire to Cut Government Expenditures Will Be Fulfilled.

Washington — The $68,000,000 surplus, which the budget figures estimated would be in the treasury at the close of the present fiscal year, June 30, has been not only achieved but surpassed, it was said at the treasury department, though the exact amount was not revealed. The success of the budget bureau in paring down expenses in the last three months has not only increased the prospective surplus, but indicates that President Coolidge's desire that total government expenditures for this year be brought to $3,000,000,000 will be fulfilled.

MEXICO RESENTS U. S. ATTITUDE

Regrets Secretary Kellogg Mentioned Reports of Impending Revolution.

Washington—President Calles of Mexico in a statement issued by the Mexican embassy here asserted that Secretary Kellogg's statement contained a "threat" against Mexico's sovereignty and that the implication that Merico stood "on trial before the world" in the guise of a defendant "in essence would only mean an insult."

Furthermore President Calles added, Mexico "does not accord to any foreign country the right to intervene in her domestic affairs, nor is she disposed to subordinate her international relations to the exigencies of another country."

President Calles also regrets that Secretary Kellogg mentioned in his statements reports of an impending revolution in Mexico, "since this last affirmation tends to cast some alarm in the world in regard to the condition of my country."

"The statement that the government of the United States will continue to support the government of Mexico only so long as it protects American interests and lives and complies with its international engagements and obligations," he declares, "embodies a threat to the sovereignty of Mexico that she cannot overlook and rejects with all energy."

TORNADO HITS DODGE COUNTY

Major Portion of Business District of Town Is Destroyed.

Rochester, Minn.—Two tornadoes, crossing the path of the southern Minnesota area which was swept by violent storms less than 48 hours previously, struck central Dodge county, partially demolishing the town of Hayfield and wrecking farm buildings with a total loss estimated at $250,000.

The major portion of the business section of Hayfield was laid in ruins by the twister and more than a score of residences were damaged, four of them being totally wrecked.

Loss of life and serious injuries among the residents of the town were only averted by the warning roar of a funnel-shaped white cloud which raced down upon Hayfield from the northwest. Hearing the coming storm, men, women and children dived into basements and there safely weathered the terrific blow. Buildings crashed down all about them, but they remained unscathed.

Rockefeller, Jr., to the Metropolitan Museum of Art. Mr. Rockefeller paid $600,000 for the collection, building and land in the norehern part of Manhattan island. Salvaged in many instances from pigstyes and dry stone walls of France by Mr. Barnard, a sculptor, the collection consists of between 600 and 700 pieces of sculpture. Paintings and other works, mostly of the French Romanesque and Gothic periods. Twenty years ago when Mr. Barnard started the collection as a hobby, French peasants regarded the ruins of cloisters as rubbish. After he had shipped the pieces out of France, the government forbade exportation of such relics.

Not God in gardens? When the eve

Nay but I have a sign,

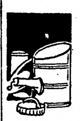
DAINTY CAKES



The small ornamental cakes which are served at weddings and receptions, and which look like small flower gardens, are easily made in the home kitchen. Small and dainty is the rule, and they may be even more delicious and quite as attractive as those which cost so much when bought.

Cakes of sunshine, angel food or pound-cake mixtures baked in sheets and then when cool cut into tiny diamonds, crescents, squares and oblongs, covered with fondant and then decorated with colored candies, cut gumdrops of different colors, citron, angelica nuts, in fact any dry preserved fruit like pineapple, ginger, lemon or orange peel will make sufficient variety to satisfy any one. Buy a sample of some well-made cake and use it as a model for decoration. With a little practice any one who likes to do such work will find many new ways of beautifying foods.

Plain Cake.—Cream two tablespoonfuls of fat, add three-eighths of a cup of sugar, one egg, one-fourth of a cupful of milk and three-fourths of a cupful of flour, one teaspoonful of baking powder and one-half teaspoonful of flavoring. Mix and bake in a moderate oven.

Babies who will not thrive on any kind of food have been nourished on whey in combination with skim milk, milk, sugar and cream. Whey is valuable because of its abundant mineral content, in natural physical solution.

Sweethearts.—Cream two-thirds of a cupful of butter with one-half cupful of powdered sugar, then add one teaspoonful of boiling water and a teaspoonful of vanilla. When the mixture is very light break in two eggs, one at a time, beating one minute after each addition. Now add three cupfuls of pastry flour gradually, and when the dough leaves the side of the bowl turn it out onto a pastry-board covered with one cupful of flour. Knead lightly, working in the flour; the dough must be smooth and not stick to the hands. Place the dough back in the bowl and cover with a cloth; let stand two hours. Now roll out one-half of the dough, one-quarter inch in thickness. Cut with a small heart-shaped cutter, place on a baking sheet and bake slowly. When the cakes are cold, ice with confectioner's sugar, made smooth with hot water; to this add a little bit of red vegetable coloring to give a pale pink color; mix thoroughly, then ice the cakes. This same mixture may be cut with a doughnut cutter; decorate with halves of blanched almonds, three on each cake; sprinkle with sugar mixed with cinnamon. These are called sand tarts and are very attractive as well as palatable.

Picnic Time.

At this season of the year when little trips into the country are such a joy, the need of a variety of sandwiches is felt. Here are a few suggestions:

Fried Egg Sandwich.—This made and served at once is a most filling sandwich. Butter bread, cook an egg in butter in the frying pan, lay a thin slice of onion on the buttered bread, then place the egg, another slice of onion and the top slice; it is now ready to "fall to."

Tomato Club Sandwich.—Lay thick slices of tomato on slices of buttered toast, sprinkle with salt and pepper, finely minced olives and parsley, add a layer of thin, nicely cooked bacon and cover with another slice of toast.

Russian Egg Sandwiches. — Chop three hard-cooked eggs and mix with the following dressing: Add chopped pickle, pepper or chili sauce to mayonnaise, using about four tablespoonfuls, enough to make the mixture the consistency to spread.

Italian Sandwiches.—To chili sauce, mayonnaise, chopped ham, celery, mustard and cayenne, add salt if needed and spread on whole wheat bread.

Anchovy Sandwiches.—Pound to a paste enough anchovies for the desired number of sandwiches. Add lemon juice and a little mayonnaise to soften.

Tomato and Cucumber Salad.—Prepare small-sized tomatoes by scooping out the pulp and draining the cups. Chop one small cucumber and a tablespoonful of onion with a little chopped celery, refill the cups, using some of the pulp removed. The remaining pulp may be used in various dishes, as soup or molded salads. Mix the filling with a highly-seasoned salad dressing, finish the top with a spoonful of thick mayonnaise and sprinkle with finely minced chives or green pepper. The tomatoes may be arranged on lettuce, endive, water cress or a nasturtium leaf.

The Talks for Women on the Subject of Finance were held every two weeks in the crystal room of the Blackstone and were a great success. Paula was right. Much of old Aug Hempel's shrewdness and business foresight had descended to her. The women came—widows with money to invest; business women who had thriftily saved a portion of their salaries; moneyed women who wanted to manage their own property, or who resented a husband's interference. Some came out of curiosity. Others for lack of anything better to do. Others to gaze on the well-known banker or lawyer or business man who was scheduled to address the meeting. Dirk spoke three or four times during the winter and was markedly a favorite. The women, in smart crepe gowns and tailored suits and small chic hats, twittered and murmured about him, even while they sensibly digested his well-thought-out remarks. He looked very handsome, clean-cut, and distinguished there on the platform in his admirably tailored clothes, a small white flower in his buttonhole. He talked easily, clearly, fluently; answered the questions put to him afterward with just the right mixture of thoughtful hesitation and confidence.

It was decided that for the national advertising there must be an illustration that would catch the eye of women, and interest them. The person to do it, Dirk thought, was this Dallas O'Mara whose queer hen-track signature you saw scrawled on half the advertising illustrations that caught your eye. Paula had not been enthusiastic about this idea.

"M-m-m, she's very good," Paula had said, guardedly, "but aren't there others who are better?"

"She!" Dirk had exclaimed. "Is it a woman? I didn't know. That name might be anything."

"Oh, yes, she's a woman. She's said to be very—very attractive."

Dirk sent for Dallas O'Mara. She replied, suggesting an appointment two weeks from that date. Dirk decided not to wait, consulted other commercial artists, looked at their work, heard their plans outlined, and was satisfied with none of them. The time was short. Ten days had passed. He had his secretary call Dallas O'Mara on the telephone. Could she come down to see him that day at eleven?

No: she worked until four daily at her studio.

Could she come to his office at four-thirty, then?

Yes, but wouldn't it be better if he could come to her studio where he could see something of the various types of drawings—oils, or black-and-white, or crayons. She was working mostly in crayons now.

All this relayed by his secretary at the telephone to Dirk at his desk. He jammed his cigarette end viciously into a tray, blew a final infuriated wraith of smoke, and picked up the telephone connection on his own desk. "One of those d—d temperamental near-artists trying to be grand," he muttered, his hand over the mouthpiece. "Here, Miss Rawlings—I'll talk to her. Switch her over."

"Hello, Miss—uh—O'Mara. This is Mr. DeJong talking. I much prefer that you come to my office and talk to me." (No more of this nonsense).

Her voice: "Certainly, if you prefer it. I thought the other would save us both some time. I'll be there at four-thirty." Her voice was leisurely, low, rounded. An admirable voice. Restful.

"Very well. Four-thirty," said Dirk crisply. Jerked the receiver onto the hook. That was the way to handle 'em. These females of forty with straggling hair and a bundle of drawings under their arm.

The female of forty with straggling hair and a bundle of drawings under her arm was announced at four thirty to the dot. Dirk let her wait five minutes in the outer office, being still a little annoyed. At four-thirty-five there entered his private office a tall slim girl in a smart little broadtail jacket, fur-trimmed skirt, and a black hat at once so daring and so simple that even a man must recognize its French nativity. She carried no portfolio of drawings under her arms.

Through the man's mind flashed a series of unbusinesslike thoughts such as: "Gosh! . . . Eyes! . . . That's way I like to see girl dress. . . . Tired lookin'. . . . No guess it's her eyes—sort of fatigued . . . Pretty. . . . No, she isn't. . . . Yes, she. . . ." Aloud he said, "This is very kind of you, Miss O'Mara." Then he thought that sounded pompous and said, curtly, "Sit down."

Miss O'Mara sat down. Miss O'Mara looked at him with her tired deep blue eyes. Miss O'Mara said nothing. She regarded him pleasantly, quietly, composedly. He waited for her to say that usually she did not come to business offices; that she had only twenty minutes to give him; that the day was warm, or cold; his office handsome; the view over the river magnificent. Miss O'Mara said nothing, pleasantly. So Dirk began to talk, rather hurriedly.

Now, this was a new experience for Dirk DeJong. Usually women spoke to him first and fluently. Quiet women waxed voluble under his silence; voluble women chattered. Paula always spoke a hundred words to his one. But here was a woman more silent than he; not sullenly silent, nor heavily silent, but quietly, composedly, restfully silent.

"I'll tell you the sort of thing we want, Miss O'Mara." He told her. When he had finished she probably would burst out with three or four plans. The others had done that.

When he had finished she said, "I'll think about it for a couple of days while I'm working on something else. I always do. I'm doing a soap picture now. I can begin work on yours Wednesday."

"But I'd like to see it—that is, I'd like to have an idea of what you're planning to do with it." Did she think he was going to let her go ahead without consulting his judgment!

"Oh, it will be all right. But drop into the studio if you like. It will take me about a week, I suppose. I'm over on Ontario in that old studio building. You'll know it by the way most of the bricks have fallen out of the building and are scattered over the sidewalk." She smiled a slow wide smile. Her teeth were good but her mouth was too big, he thought. Nice big warm kind of smile, though. He found himself smiling, too, sociably. Then he became businesslike again. Very businesslike.

"How much do you—what is your—what would you expect to get for a drawing such as that?"

"Fifteen hundred dollars," said Miss O'Mara.

"Nonsense." He looked at her then. Perhaps that had been humor. But she was not smiling. "You mean fifteen hundred for a single drawing?"

"For that sort of thing, yes."

"I'm afraid we can't pay that, Miss O'Mara."

Miss O'Mara stood up. "That is my price." She was not at all embarrassed. He realized that he had never seen such effortless composure. It was he who was fumbling with the objects on his flat-topped desk—a pen, a sheet of paper, a blotter. "Good-by, Mr.—DeJong." She held out a friendly hand. He took it. Her hair was gold—dull gold, not bright—and coiled in a single great knot at the back of her head, low. He took her hand. The tired eyes looked up at him.

"Well, if that's your price, Miss O'Mara. I wasn't prepared to pay any such—but of course I suppose you top-notchers do get crazy prices for your work."

"Not any crazier than the prices you top-notchers get."

"Still, fifteen hundred dollars is quite a lot of money."

"I think so, too. But then, I'll always think anything over nine dollars is quite a lot of money. You see, I used to get twenty-five cents apiece for sketching hats for Gage's."

She was undeniably attractive. "And now you've arrived. You're successful."

"Arrived! Heavens, no! I've started."

"Who gets more money than you do for a drawing?"

"Nobody, I suppose."

"Well, then?"

"Well, then, in another minute I'll be telling you the story of my life."

She smiled again her slow wide smile; turned to leave. Dirk decided that while most women's mouths were merely features this girl's was a decoration.

She was gone. Miss Ethelinda Quinn et al., in the outer office, appraised the costume of Miss Dallas O'Mara from her made-to-order footgear to her made-in-France millinery and achieved a lightning mental reconstruction of their own costumes. Dirk DeJong in the inner office realized that he had ordered a fifteen-hundred-dollar drawing, sight unseen, and that Paula was going to ask questions about it.

"Make a note, Miss Rawlings, to call Miss O'Mara's studio on Thursday."

In the next few days he learned that a surprising lot of people knew a surprisingly good deal about this Dallas O'Mara. She hailed from Texas, hence the name. She was twenty-eight—twenty-nine—thirty-two—thirty-six. She was beautiful. She was ugly. She was an orphan. She had worked her way through art school. She had no sense of the value of money. Two years ago she had achieved sudden success with her drawings. Her ambition was to work in oils. She toiled like a galley-slave; played like a child; had twenty beaux and no lover; her friends, men and women, were legion and wandered in and out of her studio as though it were a public thoroughfare. She supported an assortment of unlucky brothers and spineless sisters in Texas and points West.

Dirk had made the appointment with her for Thursday at three. Paula said she'd go with him, and went. She dressed for Dallas O'Mara and the result was undeniably enchanting. Dallas sometimes did a crayon portrait, or even attempted one in oils. It was considered something of an achievement to be asked to pose for her. Paula's hat had been chosen in deference to hat, hair and profile, and her pearls with an eye to all four. The whole defied competition on the part of Miss Dallas O'Mara.

Miss Dallas O'Mara, in her studio, was perched on a high stool before an easel with a large tray of assorted crayons at her side. She looked a sight and didn't care at all. She greeted Dirk and Paula with a cheerful friendliness and went right on working. A model, very smartly gowned, was sitting for her.

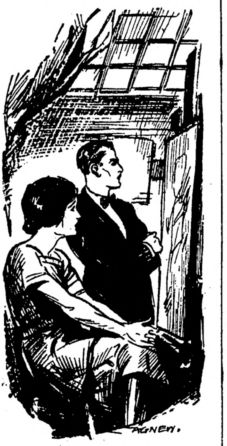
"Hello!" said Dallas O'Mara. "This is it. Do you think you're going to like it?"

"Oh," said Dirk. "Is that it?" It was merely the beginning of a drawing of the smartly gowned model. "Oh, that's it, is it?" Fifteen hundred dollars!

"I hope you didn't think it was going to be a picture of a woman buying bonds." She went on working. She had on a faded all-enveloping smock, over which French ink, rubber cement, pencil marks, crayon dust and wash were so impartially distributed that the whole blended and mixed in a rich mellow haze like the Chicago atmosphere itself. The collar of a white silk blouse, not especially clean, showed above this. On her feet were soft kid bedroom slippers, scuffed, with pompons on them. Her dull gold hair was carelessly rolled into that great loose knot at the back. Across one cheek was a swipe of black.

"Well," thought Dirk, "she looks a sight."

Dallas O'Mara waved a friendly hand toward some chairs on which were piled hats, odd garments, bristol board and (on the broad arm of one) a piece of yellow cake. "Sit down." She called to the girl who had opened the door to them: "Gilda, will you dump some of those things. This is Mrs. Storm, Mr. DeJong—Gilda Hanan." Her secretary, Dirk later learned.



"Hello!" Said Dallas O'Mara. "This Is It. Do You Think You're Going to Like It?"

The place was disorderly, comfortable, shabby. A battered grand piano stood in one corner. A great skylight formed half the ceiling and sloped down at the north end of the room. A man and a girl sat talking earnestly on the couch in another corner. A swarthy foreign-looking chap, vaguely familiar to Dirk, was playing softly at the piano. The telephone rang. Miss Hanan took the message, transmitted it to Dallas O'Mara, received the answer, repeated it.

Perched atop the stool, one slippered foot screwed in a rung, Dallas worked concentratedly, calmly, earnestly. There was something splendid, something impressive, something magnificent about her absorption, her indifference to appearance, her unawareness of outsiders, her concentration on the work before her. Her nose was shiny. Dirk hadn't seen a girl with a shiny nose in years.

"How can you work with all this crowd around?"

"Oh," said Dallas in that deep, restful, leisurely voice of hers, "they are always between twenty and thirty"—she slapped a quick scarlet line on the board, rubbed it out at once—"thousand people in and out of here every hour, just about. I like it."

"Gosh!" he thought, "she's—I don't know—she's—"

"Shall we go?" said Paula.

He had forgotten all about her. "Yes. Yes, I'm ready if you are."

Outside: "Do you think you're going to like the picture?" Paula asked. They stepped into her car.

"Sure."

"Attractive, isn't she?"

"Think so?"

So he was going [illegible] as he! Paula threw [illegible] viciously, jerked the lever into second speed. "Her neck was dirty."

"Crayon dust," said Dirk.

"Not necessarily," replied Paula.

Dirk turned sideways to look at her. It was as though he saw her for the first time. She looked brittle, hard, artificial—small, somehow. Not in physique but in personality.

The picture was finished and delivered within ten days. In that time Dirk went twice to the studio in Ontario street. Dallas did not seem to mind. Neither did she appear particularly interested. She was working hard both times. Once she looked as he had seen her on his first visit. The second time she had on a fresh crisp smock of faded yellow that was glorious with her hair; and high-heeled beige kid slippers, very smart. She was like a little girl who has just been freshly scrubbed and dressed in a clean pinafore, Dirk thought.

He thought a good deal about Dallas O'Mara. He found himself talking about her in what he assumed to be a careless, offhand manner. He liked to talk about her. He told his mother of her. He could let himself go with Selina, and he must have taken advantage of this for she looked at him intently and said: "I'd like to meet her. I've never met a girl like that."

"I'll ask her if she'll let me bring you up to the studio some time when you're in town."

He did not know that Dallas played until he came upon her late one afternoon sitting at the piano in the twilight with Bert Colson, the black-face comedian. Colson sang those terrible songs about April showers bringing violets, and about mah Ma-ha-ha-ha-ha-ha-ha-my but they didn't seem terrible when he sang them. There was about this lean, hollow-chested, somber-eyed comedian a poignant pathos, a gorgeous sense of rhythm—a something unnameable that bound you to him, made you love him. In the theater he came out to the edge of the runway and took the audience in his arms. He talked like a bootblack and sang like an angel. Dallas at the piano, he leaning over it, were doing "blues." The two were rapt, ecstatic. I got the blues—I said the blues—I got the this or that—the somethingorother—blue—hoo-hoos. They scarcely noticed Dirk. Dallas had nodded when he came in, and had gone on playing. Colson sang the cheaply sentimental ballad as though it were the folksong of a tragic race. His arms were extended, his face rapt. As Dallas played the tears stood in her eyes. When they had finished, "Isn't it a terrible song?" she said. "I'm crazy about it. Bert's going to try it out tonight."

"Who—uh—wrote it?" asked Dirk politely.

Dallas began to play again. "H'm? Oh, I did." They were off once more.

It was practically impossible to get a minute with her alone. That irritated him. People were always drifting in and out of the studio—queer, important, startling people; little, dejected, shabby people. An impecunious girl art student, red-haired and wistful, that Dallas was taking in until the girl got some money from home; a pearl-hung grand-opera singer who was condescending to the Chicago opera for a fortnight. They paid no attention to Dirk. Yet there was nothing rude about their indifference. They simply were more interested in what they were doing. He left telling himself that he wouldn't go there again. Hanging around a studio. But next day he was back.

"Look here, Miss O'Mara," he had got her alone for a second. "Look here, will you come out to dinner with me some time? And the theater?"

"Love to."

"When?" He was actually trembling.

"Tonight." He had an important engagement. He cast it out of his life.

"Tonight! That's grand. Where do you want to dine? The Casino?" The smartest club in Chicago; a little pink stucco Italian box of a place on the Lake Shore drive. He was rather proud of being in a position to take her there as his guest.

"Oh, no, I hate those arty little places. I like dining in a hotel full of all sorts of people. Dining in a club means you're surrounded by people who're pretty much alike. Their membership in the club means they're there because they are all interested in golf, or because they're university graduates, or belong to the same political party, or write, or paint, or have incomes of over fifty thousand a year, or something. I like 'em mixed up, higgledy-piggledy. A dining-room full of gamblers and insurance agents, and actors, merchants, thieves, bootleggers, lawyers, kept ladies, wives, flaps, traveling men, millionaires, everything. That's what I call dining out. Unless one is dining at a friend's house, of course." A rarely long speech for her.

Marvels of Jelly-Fish

The jelly-fish has a truly wonderful way of reproducing its species. In most cases the beginning is an egg, which, lying on the bottom, produces a beautiful tree-like growth. The "tree" fastens itself to the bottom and brings forth buds which, when ripe, drop off and develop into jelly-fish. The latter in turn lay eggs and the process is repeated. Most of the very large species have a different way of reproducing themselves. The egg is set free in the water and develops into a pear-shaped larva, which for a while swims about rapidly, being provided with hair-like appendages that serve the purpose of oars. Then the larva settles down, anchors itself to the bottom, increases in size rapidly and finally splits up into thin, flat discs which swim off and grow up into large jelly-fishes.

Farmers lose large sums of money each year because farm machinery is not properly cared for. Rust and rot cause rapid deterioration of implements. They shorten their period of service and thus reduce your profits.

These losses can be decreased by housing your machinery when not in use in a modern machine shed. Your increased profits, due to the longer life and greater efficiency of your farm tools, will soon pay the cost of constructing such a shelter.

Besides protecting your implements, the building can also provide you with room for a machine shop or tractor garage in which you can do necessary repair work on rainy days. The space upstairs can be used for storage purposes.

Drop in today and let us show you how inexpensive such a profit-making improvement on your frrm really is.

Wedding Bells

A very pretty wedding took place last Sunday at the Halvorson home near Viking, when Ida Reierson of Holt and Raymond Halvorson were united in marriage.

The bride wore a gown of pale canton crepe, the bridal veil held in place by a wreath of orange blossoms. She carried a large bouquet of white roses, sweet peas and ferns. Gladys Ellestad who was matron of honor was dressed in a light green gown and wore a corsage bouquet of orphelia roses and blue sweet-peas. Pearl Reierson, who was bridesmaid, was dressed in a lighter shade of green and wore a corsage bouquet of pink roses and sweet peas.

The bride, with her attendants came in to the strains of the wedding march, proceeding to the altar where the groom and his best men, William Halvorson a brother, and Bennie Halvorson a cousin, awaited. Rev. Tallakson read the ceremony. The ring ceremony was read in the presence of about fifty relatives.

A delightful two-course luncheon was served at six o'clock. Soon after, the bride and groom departed for North Dakota where they will spend a week visiting friends.

By one of those strange chances most of the lady passengers in the moter bus seemed to be carrying infants, one or two of whom were fractious.

At one stopping place the harrassed conductor was faced by two more ladies, each of whom carried the inevitable baby. But patience, though a virtue has its limits.

"Room on top, madam," he said sternly, as he held out a detaining arm "the incubator's full."

50,000 FILE PAST LA FOLLETTE BIER

Body Lies in State in Rotunda of Wisconsin's Capitol at Madison.

Madison, Wis.—Silently and reverently citizens of Wisconsin paid their tribute to Robert Marion La Follette.

More than 50,000 men, women and children looked for the last time upon the thin and drawn features of the once never tiring "Fighting Bob." The body rested in the rotunda of the magnificent capitol, the structuer itself a monument to the man who has now taken high place in the history of the state and nation. From noon until late in the evening the people filed by the bier.

Never before in the middle west has there been such an outpouring for such an occasion. Never before a more heartfelt, sincere tribute paid. From all walks of life, the high and the lowly, they came. From all parts of the state, by automobile, train and bus, the people came.

It was a simple demonstration, just as LaFollette would have liked. There was no sign of the military. National guardsmen, there to preserve order in the line which seemer to have no end, were in civilian garb. They wore only small white badges to distinguish them as officers of authority.

Senators Borah of Idaho, Moses of New Hampshire, Norris of Nebraska, Lenroot of Wisconsin, Shipstead of Minnesota, Frazier of North Dakota, Brookhart and Cummins of Iowa, Wheeler of Montana, Robinson of Arkansas, Harrison of Mississippi, Norbeck of South Dakota, Copeland of New York, Kendrick of Wyoming and Jones of New Mexico headed the list of honorary pallbearers.

Leaders Pay Tribute.

Death resulted from heart failure induced by a general breakdown and an attack of bronchial asthma.

The Wisconsin senator and later independent presidential candidate began failing in health, even before the 1924 campaign. Several weeks ago he contracted a severe cold which developed into asthma.

Great difficulties were encountered in landing the planes and one plane was wrecked, the party returning the last 130 miles on a steamer after having missed locating the pole.

FASCIST ENACT LAWS

Mussolini Asserts Action "Completes Cycle for State Defense."

Rome—The most momentous session of the chamber of deputies since the advanent of Fascism was concluded, the followers of Premier Mussolini having succeeded in putting through a series of legislative measures carrying out, in part at least, the governmental program of Fascistization by approving bills regulating the press and empowering the government to issue decree laws, which two measures, Mussolini told the parliamentarians, "complete the cycle of measures which may be defined as instruments for the defense of the state."

CALLES NOT TO ALTER PLAN

Declares U. S. Note Will Not Change Agrarian Policy.

TAX REFORM DRIVE OPENS

Advocates Reduction of Surtaxes and Excise Levies to Aid Industry.

Chicago—Frank W. Mondell, former Republican leader of the house, declared that tax reform has been made secondary to tax reduction in the period since the war, but that the time has come for voters to "exert every legitimate influence to have evils corrected," in an address before the Hamilton club here.

"With a desire to give full credit for all that has been accomplished," Mr. Mondell said, "it must be admitted that we have tax rates which cannot possibly be justified as a permanent peace-time program, unless the views of our people in regard to sound tax policies have been entirely revolutionized."

Milwaukee — Emanuel L. Philipp, 63 years old, war-time governor of Wisconsin, died at a local hospital here after a day's illness. The former governor was removed from his home to a hospital when he complained to his physician that he was feeling weak. Death came peacefully due to a weakened heart, according to his physician.

Mayflower Ordered to Massachusetts

Washington — The Mayflower was ordered to leave Washington navy yard for Marblehead, Mass., and anchor near the "summer White House" at Swampscott. This will enable it to arrive in New England waters before the President begins his summer vacation. COOLIDGE STUDIES DRY LAW PLAN

President Goes Over Prohibition Enforcement with Lincoln C. Andrews.

Washington—A general tightening up of prohibition reinforcement all over the country is scheduled for the near future, it was learned at the White House after a conference between Lincoln C. Andrews, assistant secretary of the treasury in charge of prohibition enforcement, and President Coolidge.

Mr. Andrews refused to discuss his talk with the President when he left the White House, but it is known that he went over the whole prohibition situation and outlined his plans for future enforcement.

Mr. Andrews said his staff was studying the results obtained in the first offensive with a view to shutting out rum smugglers entirely from the country.

The coast guard blockade of the rum fleet will be extended until the limits of its effectiveness are reached, Mr. Andrews said.

Mr. Andrews indicated that there were impending developments in the rum war.

U. S. NOT TO BE GUARANTOR

Entanglement in European Treaty Would Be Violation of Policy.

Washington—Definite announcement that the United States government will not act as guaranty for security pledges to be entered into between Germany, France, Great Britain and Italy or in any way become entangled in the Euorpean security pact, was made at the White House.

Such a step, in the opinion of President Coolidge, would be contrary to this government's long standing European policy of not making political engagements of that nature.

This explanation of the President's position was given out by the official spokesmen in response to queries concerning press reports which stated that Berlin had suggested treaty arrangements based on a Rhine compact entered into by Germany, France, Great Britain and Italy, and completed by arbitration treaty pledges against war, all to take the form of commitments by the contracting powers toward the government of the United States as trustee.

NATIONAL BUS GROUP FORMED

$296,000,000 Capital Is Represented In Association Organied.

Chicago—The National Motor Bus association was organized to represent $296,000,000 worth of capital, at the close of a two days' conference of bus operators here.

The conference adopted a resolution asking congress to empower the interstate commerce commission to grant or refuse certificates of convenience or necessity to motor carriers engaged in interstate commerce, but holding that the authority of commission over such traffic should be limited to the granting or refusing of such certificates.

U. S. TO APPEAL OIL CASE

Lower Court Rules Against Government in Oil Lease Suit.

Washington—Harry F. Sinclair's victory in the government's attempt to cancel the Teapot Dome naval oil lease probably will result in throwing that case as well as the one decided against E. L. Doheny involving the Elk Hills reserve into the supreme court of the United States.

The Doheny case in which the government won already has been appealed, and government counsel have given notice that they would carry the Sinclair case to the higher courts in the event their efforts at Cheyenne resulted in failure.

Although the situation presents an apparent conflict of judicial opinion it is pointed out here that some of the circumstances in the two cases differ, and they will be fought out on their individual merits.

BRITISH STONED BY CHINESE

Consul Obliged to Take Refuge in Shanghai Temple—Roundup of Radicals Begun.

Shanghai — A wireless message from Chungkiang says the situation there is critical. The British consul was forced to leave his consulate and take up residence in the Lingmen temple. British nationals have been stoned and assaulted in the street, the message says.

Warned by the powers of a widespread communist plot involving an attack of foreigners, China has begun a roundup of radicals in provinces where they have been active.

Deaths in New Jersey Wreck 45.

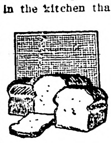
Hackettstown, N. J.—The number of deaths resulting from the derailment of a special train on the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western railroad at Rockport Sag, near Hackettstown, was increased to 45 by the death at Phillipsburg of Clemens Schmidt of Chicago. Relatives of the dead arrived from Chicago and began arrangements for removal of bodies. A coroner's jury meets in Washington, N. J., and after visiting the morgue here, will inspect the scene of the accident.

The Kitchen Cabinet

(©, 1925, Western Newspaper Union.)

Wives are the only laborers on earth who work for board and clothes; even these are often indifferent.

WHAT TO DO WITH BREAD



There is probably no greater waste in the kitchen than that of bread. A piece of bread that has become dry is usually considered useless by a vast majority of cooks. There are a countless leftover bits that cannot be used for toast, that are thrown into the garbage pail. These small scraps could be made into palatable and wholesome creations, to say nothing of the saving.

All crumbs left from the bread board, all trimmings of sandwiches, all broken pieces not available for toast should be gathered. A dish which is both appetizing and filling may be made of these crumbs and bits while they are still moist. Try the following:

Egged Bread.—Remove the crusts from broken bits of bread. Break it into small pieces—there should be two and one-half cupfuls. Melt four tablespoonfuls of butter or two of butter and two of ham fat; add the bits of bread and toss them lightly until well coated with fat. Pour over the bread three eggs slightly beaten and diluted with one-half cupful of rich milk. Continue to toss the mixture lightly with a fork so that each bit of bread is enclosed in a coating of egg. Season with salt and pepper and serve.

Tomato Toast.—Dip slices of stale bread into water and place in a hot oven to become heated through, or steam in a steamer until moist and hot. Butter generously and cover with well-seasoned tomato and serve hot.

Rhubarb Pudding.—Butter slices of bread and lay in a deep pudding dish, cover with finely cut rhubarb, mixed well with sugar; repeat until sufficient bread is used to serve the family; add a few spoonfuls of water and bake until the rhubarb is soft. Serve hot or cold.

Bread Fritters.—Cut stale bread into thin slices, shape with a small biscuit cutter, spread with butter and raspberry jam, press a pair together and dip into fritter batter, fry in deep fat and serve hot with maple sirup.

There are bread puddings, milk toast, and any number of dishes in which a few buttered crumbs add to both the appearance and nourishment.

Everyday Good Things.

Dried beef cut into bits, added to a white sauce and used with scalloped macaroni makes a good luncheon or supper dish.

Charleston Egg Toast.—Lay narrow strips of toast in a pudding dish, then a layer of sliced whites of eggs, then a layer of toast, then a layer of riced yolks. Pour over a highly seasoned cream sauce and heat in a hot oven.

Cheese Nuts.—Blanch and brown lightly almonds or walnuts, chop and place in a buttered pan. Sprinkle with grated cheese and bread crumbs; season with salt and pepper. Soften with boiling water and bake twenty minutes. Serve with toasted crackers.

Oatmeal Pudding.—To one quart of milk add one cupful of uncooked oatmeal, one-half cupful of sugar and one-half cupful of molasses. Season with salt, dot with butter and bake slowly in a moderate oven one and one-half hours. Serve with cream.

Raspberry Flummery.—Cover a quart of raspberries with cold water, boil ten minutes and strain; add a cupful of sugar mixed with half a cupful of cornstarch, thinned for pouring with a little cold water. Cook together until the starch is thoroughly cooked. Pour into wet molds. Serve with whipped cream.

Peach Cake Pudding.—Line a baking dish with slices of sponge cake soaked in orange or peach juice. Fill the dish with fresh sliced peaches well sugared. Cover the top with a meringue and bake until brown. Serve with cold cream.

Creamed Chicken Salad.—Soak a tablespoonful of gelatin in half a cupful of chicken broth. Chop the white meat from a well-cooked chicken or put it through the meat grinder. Beat well the yolks of four eggs, add one and one-half cupfuls of hot chicken broth, cook over water till thick, add the gelatin and seasoning to taste. Stand in cold water to chill. Mold and serve with mayonnaise.

Parsley will keep for two weeks if well washed and placed in a mason jar. Set in the ice box and sprinkle once with cold water.

Savory Sliced Ham.—Mix together three teaspoonfuls of dry mustard, one-fourth of a teaspoonful of pepper, two tablespoonfuls of catsup and a few dashes of cayenne. Have ready a pound of thinly sliced boiled ham. Spread each slice with the mustard mixture with a sprinkling of grated American cheese, using a cupful. Place the slices on top of each other and bake for fifteen minutes in a hot oven. Remove and chill. When ready to serve cut down at right angles to the layers.

—19—

"Perhaps," eagerly, "you'll dine at my little apartment some time. Just four or six of us, or even—"

"Perhaps."

"Would you like the Drake tonight?"

"It looks too much like a Roman bath. The pillars scare me. Let's go to the Blackstone."

They went to the Blackstone. The head waiter knew him. "Good evening, Mr. DeJong." Dirk was secretly gratified. Then, with a shock, he realized that the head waiter was grinning at Dallas and Dallas was grinning at the head waiter. "Hello, Andre," said Dallas.

"Good evening, Miss O'Mara." The text of his greeting was correct and befitting the head waiter at the Blackstone. But his voice was lyric and his eyes glowed. His manner of seating her at a table was an enthronement.

At the look in Dirk's eyes, "I met him in the army," Dallas explained, "when I was in France. He's a grand lad."

"Were you in—what did you do in France?"

"Oh, odd jobs."

Her dinner gown was very smart, but the pink ribbon strap of an undergarment showed untidily at one side—her silk brassiere, probably. Paula would have—but then, a thing like that was impossible in Paula's perfection of toilette. He loved the way the gown cut sharply away at the shoulder to show her firm white arms. It was dull gold, the color of her hair. This was one Dallas. There were a dozen—a hundred. Yet she was always the same. You never knew whether you were going to meet the gamin of the rumpled smock and the smudged face or the beauty of the little fur jacket. Sometimes Dirk thought she looked like the splendid goddesses you saw in paintings—the kind with high, pointed breasts and gracious, gentle pose—holding out a horn of plenty. There was about her something genuine and earthy and elemental. He noticed that her nails were short and not well cared for—not glittering and pointed and cruelly sharp and horridly vermilion, like Paula's. That pleased him, too, somehow.

"Some oysters?" he suggested. "They are perfectly safe here. Or fruit cocktail? Then breast of guinea hen under glass and an artichoke—"

She looked a little worried. "If you—suppose you take that. Me, I'd like a steak and some potatoes au gratin and a salad with Russian—"

"That's fine!" He was delighted. He doubled that order and they consumed it with devastating thoroughness. She ate rolls. She ate butter. She made no remarks about the food except to say, once, that it was good and that she had forgotten to eat lunch because she had been so busy working. All this Dirk found most restful and refreshing.

Usually, when you dined in a restaurant with a woman she said, "Oh, I'd love to eat some of those crisp little rolls!"

You said, "Why not?"

Invariably the answer to this was "I daren't! Goodness! A half pound at least. I haven't eaten a roll with butter in a year."

Again you said, "Why not?"

"Afraid I'll get fat."

Automatically, "You! Nonsense You're just right."

He was bored with these women who talked about their weight, figure, lines. He thought it in bad taste. Paula was always rigidly refraining from this or that. It made him uncomfortable to sit at the table facing her; eating his thorough meal while she nibbled at wile curls of Melba toast, a lettuce leaf, and half a sugarless grapefruit. It lessened his enjoyment of his own oysters, steak, coffee. He thought that she always eyed his food a little avidly, for all her expressed indifference to it. She was looking a little haggard, too.

"The theater's next door," he said. "Just a step. We don't have to leave here until after eight."

"That's nice." She had her cigarette with her coffee in a mellow, sensuous atmosphere of enjoyment. He was talking about himself a good deal. He felt relaxed, at ease, happy.

"You know I'm an architect—at least, I was one. Perhaps that's why I like to hang around your shop so. I get sort of homesick for the pencils and the drawing board—the whole thing."

"Why did you give it up, then?"

"Nothing in it."

"How do you mean nothing in it?"

"No money. After the war nobody was building. Oh, I suppose if I'd hung on—"

"And then you became a banker, h'm? Well, there ought to be money enough in a bank."

He was a little nettled. "I wasn't a banker—at first. I was a bond salesman."

Her brows met in a little frown. "I'd rather," Dallas said slowly, "plan one back door of a building that's going to help make this town beautiful and significant than sell all the bonds that ever floated a whatever it is that bonds are supposed to float."

He defended himself. "I felt that way, too. But you see, my mother had given me my education, really. She worked for it. I couldn't go dubbing along, earning just enough to keep me. I wanted to give her things. I wanted—"

"Did she want those things? Did she want you to give up architecture and go into bonds?"

"Well—she—I don't know that she exactly—" He was too decent—still too much the son of Selina DeJong—to be able to lie about that.

"You said you were going to let me meet her."

"Would you let me bring her in? Or perhaps you'd even—would you drive out to the farm with me some day. She'd like that so much."

"So would I."

He leaned toward her, suddenly. "Listen, Dallas. What do you think of me, anyway?" He wanted to know. He couldn't stand not knowing any longer.

"I think you're a nice young man."

That was terrible. "But I don't want you to think I'm a nice young man. I want you to like me—a lot. Tell me, what haven't I got that you think I ought to have? Why do you put me off so many times? I never feel that I'm really near you. What is it I lack?" He was abject.

"Well, if you're asking for it. I do demand of the people I see often that they possess at least a splash of splendor in their makeup. Some people are nine-tenths splendor and one-tenth tawdriness, like Gene Meran. And some are nine-tenths tawdriness and one-tenth splendor, like Sam Huebch. But some people are all just a nice even pink without a single patch of royal purple."

"And that's me, h'm?"

He was horribly disappointed, hurt, wretched. But a little angry, too. His pride. Why, he was Dirk DeJong, the most successful of Chicago's younger men; the most promising; the most popular. After all, what did she do but paint commercial pictures for fifteen hundred dollars apiece?

"What happens to the men who fall in love with you? What do they do?"

Dallas stirred her coffee thoughtfully. "They usually tell me about it."

"And then what?"

"Then they seem to feel better and we become great friends."

"But don't you ever fall in love with them?" Pretty d—d sure of herself. "Don't you ever fall in love with them?"

"I almost always do," said Dallas.

He plunged. "I could give you a lot of things you haven't got, purple or no purple."

"I'm going to France in April. Paris."

"What d'you mean! Paris. What for?"

"Study. I want to do portraits. Oils."

He was terrified. "Can't you do them here?"

"Oh, no. Not what I need. I have been studying here. I've been taking life-work three nights a week at the Art institute, just to keep my hand in."

"So that's where you are, evenings?" He was strangely relieved. "Let me go with you some time, will you?" Anything. Anything.

She took him with her one evening, steering him successfully past the stern Irishman who guarded the entrance to the basement classrooms; to her locker, got into her smock, grabbed her brushes, went directly to her place, fell to work at once. Dirk blinked in the strong light. He glanced at the dais toward which they were all gazing from time to time as they worked. On it lay a nude woman.

To himself Dirk said, in a sort of panic: "Why, say, she hasn't got any clothes on! My gosh! this is fierce. She hasn't got anything on!" He tried, meanwhile, to look easy, careless, critical. Strangely enough, he succeeded, after the first shock, not only in looking at ease, but feeling so. The class was doing the whole figure in oils.

The model was a moron with a skin like velvet and rose petals. She fell into poses that flowed like cream. Her hair was waved in wooden undulations and her nose was pure vulgarity and her earrings were drug-store pearls in triple strands but her back was probably finer than Helen's and her breasts twin snowdrifts peaked with coral. In twenty minutes Dirk found himself impersonally interested in tone, shadows, colors, line. He listened to the low voiced instructor and squinted carefully to ascertain whether that shadow on the model's stomach really should be painted blue or brown.

Even Dirk could see that Dallas' canvas was almost insultingly superior to that of the men and women about her. Beneath the flesh on her canvas there were muscles, and beneath those muscles blood and bone. You felt she had a surgeon's knowledge of anatomy.

It was after eleven when they emerged from the Art Institute doorway and stood a moment together at the top of the broad steps surveying the world that lay before them. Dallas said nothing. Suddenly the beauty of the night rushed up and overwhelmed Dirk. Gorgeousness and tawdriness; color and gloom. At the right the white tower of the Wrigley building rose wraithlike against a background of purple sky.

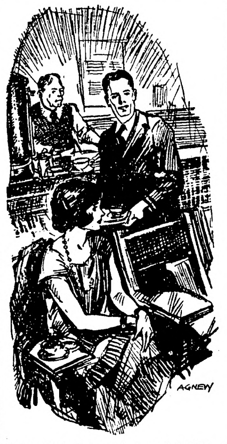
Straight ahead the flut of the Adams street L station in midair was Venetian bridge, with the black canal of asphalt flowing sluggishly beneath. The reflection of cafeteria and cigar-shop windows on either side were slender shafts of light along the canal. An enchanting sight.

"Nice," said Dallas. A long breath. She was a part of all this.

"Yes." He felt an outsider. "Want a sandwich? Are you hungry?"

"I'm starved."

They had sandwiches and coffee at an all-night one-arm lunch room because Dallas said her face was too dirty for a restaurant and she didn't want to bother to wash it. She was more than ordinarily companionable that night; a little tired; less buoyant and independent than usual. This gave her a little air of helplessness—of fatigue—that aroused all his tenderness. Her smile gave him a warm rush of pure happiness—until he saw her smile in exactly the same way at the pimply young man who lorded it over the shining nickel coffee container, as she told him that his coffee was grand.



They Had Sandwiches and Coffee at an All-Night One-Arm Lunchroom.

Chapter XV

The things that had mattered so vitally didn't seem to be important, somehow, now. The people who had seemed so desirable had become suddenly insignificant. The games he had played appeared silly games. He was seeing things through Dallas O'Mara's wise, beauty-loving eyes. Strangely enough, he did not realize that this girl saw life from much the same angle as that at which his mother regarded it. In the last few years his mother had often offended him by her attitude toward these rich and powerful friends of his—their ways, their games, their amusements, their manners. And her way of living in turn offended him. On his rare visits to the farm it seemed to him there was always some drab dejected female in the kitchen or living room or on the porch—a woman with broken teeth and comic shoes and tragic eyes—drinking great draughts of coffee and telling her woes to Selina—Sairey Gampish ladies smelling unpleasantly of peppermint and perspiration and poverty. "And he ain't had a lick of work since November—"

"You don't say! That's terrible!"

He wished she wouldn't.

Sometimes old Aug Hempel would drop out there and Dirk would come upon the two snickering wickedly together about something that he knew concerned the North Shore crowd.

It had been years since Selina had said sociably, "What did they have for dinner, Dirk? H'm?"

"Well—soup—"

"Nothing before the soup?"

"Oh, yeh. Some kind of a [illegible] those canape things, you [illegible] Caviare."

"My! Caviare!"

Sometimes Selina [illegible] naughty girl at things that Dirk had taken quite seriously. The fox hunts, for example. Lake Forest had taken to fox hunting and the [illegible] crowd kept kennels. Dirk had learned to ride—pretty well. An Englishman—a certain Captain Stokes-Beatty had initiated the North Shore into the mysteries of fox hunting. Huntin'. The North Shore learned to say [illegible] and conservat'ry. Captain Stokes-Beatty was a tall bow-legged and somewhat horse-faced young man remote in manner. The nice Farnham girl seemed fated to marry him. Paula had had a hunt breakfast at Stormwood and it had been very successful though the American men had balked a little at the deviled kidneys. The food had been patterned as far as possible after the pale flabby viands served at English hunt breakfasts and ruined in an atmosphere of lukewarm steam. The women were slim and perfectly tailored but wore their hunting clothes a trifle uneasily and self-consciously like girls in their first low-cut party dresses. Most of the men had turned stubborn on the subject of pink coats, but Captain Stokes-Beatty wore his handsomely. The fox—a worried and somewhat dejected-looking animal—had been shipped in a crate from the South and on being released had a way of sitting sociably in an Illinois corn field instead of leaping fleetly to cover. At the finish you had a feeling of guilt, as though you had killed a cockroach.

Dirk had told Selina about it, feeling rather magnificent. A fox hunt.

"A fox hunt! What for?"

"For! Why, what's any fox hunt for?"

"I can't imagine. They used to be for the purpose of ridding a fox-infested country of a nuisance. Have the foxes been bothering 'em out in Lake Forest?"

"Now, mother, don't be funny." He told her about the breakfast.

"Well, but it's so silly, Dirk. It's smart to copy from another country the things that that country does better than we do. England does gardens and woodfires and dogs and tweeds and walking shoes and pipes and leisure better than we do. But those luke-warm steamy breakfasts of theirs! It's because they haven't gas, most of them. No Kansas or Nebraska farmer's wife would stand for one of their kitchens—not for a minute. And the hired man would balk at such bacon." She giggled.

"Oh, well, if you're going to talk like that."

But Dallas O'Mara felt much the same about these things. Dallas, it appeared, had been something of a fad with the North Shore society crowd after she had painted Mrs. Robinson Gilman's portrait. She had been invited to dinners and luncheons and dances, but their doings, she told Dirk, had bored her.

"They're nice," she said, "but they don't have much fun. They're all trying to be something they're not. And that's such hard work. The women were always explaining that they lived in Chicago because their husband's business was here. They all do things pretty well—dance or paint or ride or write or sing—but not well enough. They're professional amateurs, trying to express something they don't feel; or that they don't feel strongly enough to make it worth while expressing."

She admitted, though, that they did appreciate the things that other people did well. Visiting and acknowledged writers, painters, lecturers, heroes, they entertained lavishly and hospitably in their Florentine or English or Spanish or French palaces on the North side of Chicago, Ill. Especially foreign notables of this description.

Since 1918 these had descended upon Chicago (and all America) like a plague of locusts, starting usually in New York and sweeping westward, devouring the pleasant verdure of greenbacks and chirping as they came. Returning to Europe, bursting with profits and spleen, they thriftily wrote of what they had seen and the result was more clever than amiable, bearing too, the taint of bad taste.

The Telephone

Elizabeth was three years [illegible] is more, Elizabeth, like most small girls, was very fond of games of "make believe." Her latest delight in the realm of fancy was "playing telephones," a game of which she never grew tired.

Her grandmother was well aware of Elizabeth's fancy and one night, when the little girl was proving obstinate about going to have her bath, the old lady thought she would try a little strategy.

Grandmother (holding one end of the toy telephone)—Hello! Is that Elizabeth?

Elizabeth (very delighted)—Yes grandma!

Grandmother—Well, come along Elizabeth, it's time for your bath.

Elizabeth (dropping receiver)—Wrong number!

Green Grocer

"Have you any nice fresh eggs?" asked the breezy customer.

"Madam," answered the man who had just started in the grocery business, "permit me to remind you that nice eggs are necessarily fresh and fresh eggs always nice. Moreover, if I have any, I have them today. My possession of eggs yesterday or tomorrow does not affect the situation, therefore."

"Humph!" snorted the woman as she started for the door, "eggs are not the only fresh things in this store. I'll do my trading elsewhere."—Boston Transcript.

St. Paul—Farm loans by the state of Minnesota will be financed hereafter out of the state trust funds under a plan being worked out by Governor Theodore Christianson and his advisers. In other words the state will buy its own bonds and pay interest to itself, instead of selling tax free rural credit bonds in large amounts to outside capitalists.

Minneapolis—The University of Minnesota, celebrating its greatest commencement exercises, made the day one in which its leaders and students of both past and present received all honor. The history of Minnesota's first days took its place beside the record of the great university of today as Dr. William Watts Folwell, the first president, before a throng of 10,000 persons gathered in the Memorial stadium for the graduation of 1,202 seniors, received the honorary degree of doctor of laws.

St. Paul—Governor Christianson announced his appointees on the new "superboard" of administration and finance which will control the expenditures of state departments and boards. Members of the new board are: Henry Rines, present state treasurer, named as state controller; A. J. Peterson, Dawson, budget commissioner; H. W. Austin, St. Paul, commissioner of purchases; E. W. Stark, Center City, state treasurer, to succeed Mr. Rines.

Waseca—J. J. [illegible] of Janesville and R. J. [illegible] of Iosco were named as members of the board of directors of the Waseca County Agricultural Society to fill vacancies caused by recent resignation at a meeting of the board here.

Owatonna—A meeting of directors of the Rice Lake Co-operative Creamery Association let the general contract for the construction of a new creamery building. The new building will be one of the largest and most modern in this section and will replace the old building, which was destroyed by fire late in April.

Farmers lose large sums of money each year because farm machinery is not properly cared for. Rust and rot cause rapid deterioration of implements. They shorten their period of service and thus reduce your profits.

These losses can be decreased by housing your machinery when not in use in a modern machine shed. Your increased profits, due to the longer life and greater efficiency of your farm tools, will soon pay the cost of constructing such a shelter.

Besides protecting your implements, the building can also provide you with room for a machine shop or tractor garage in which you can do necessary repair work on rainy days. The space upstairs can be used for storage purposes.

Drop in today and let us show you how inexpensive such a profit-making improvement on your frrm really is.

At the Annual Guernsey sale held at T. R. Falls this month A. O. thompson sold 2 grades and Chas. E. Horien purchased a full blooded heifer calf. Mr. Horien's herd of Guerseys are mostly all full blooded, headed with a Sire that he was offered $500.00 for at the Crop Show held at Crookston last winter. Both Mr. Thompson and Mr. Horien are members of the Guernsey Ass'n. Ole Ellingson purchased a grade cow at the sale. He also believes in getting cows that pay for more than the feed they consume. It is plain to see that our large increase every year is due mainly to our patrons weeding out their poor cows and getting better ones as well as taking better care of their cows.

SHEPHERD FREED OF GERM DEATH

Foster-Father of McClintock Declared Guiltless of Typhoid Death—Is Free Man.

Chicago—William Darling Shepherd was acquitted of the murder of his foster-son, William Nelson McClintock. The jury deliberated five hours and forty minutes.

Members of the jury would not divulge the number of ballots taken, nor the methods by which they reached final agreement. They said that they had taken a collective oath not to reveal the record of balloting.

As a result of the verdict Shepherd walked from the Cook county jail a free man, after having been in custody since March 15 last.

He still faces another murder charge, but Thomas J. Lynch permitted him to sign his own bond on this charge.

SENATOR E. F. LADD DIES

Statesman Had Been Under Treatment Two Weeks—Was 66 Years Old.

Baltimore—Senator Edwin Fremont Ladd of North Dakota died in a hospital here, passing away quietly and retaining consciousness almost to the last. Mrs. Ladd arrived from Washington an hour before the end came and was at the bedside with Milton, one of the sons who is studying law in George Washington university, and his daughter Virginia, who attends high school in Washington. Senator Ladd, while apparently realizing the end was near, aroused to greet them when they entered his room. The end came rapidly after their arrival.

Going to North Dakota in 1890 to join the forces of the North Dakota Agricultural College at Fargo, then a mere attempt and investment of a new state to obtain a betterment in agriculture, Mr. Ladd rose to some of the highest positions in the educational, chemical and political fields. United States senator, college president, writer, editor and chemist of note were but a few of his life achievements and positions.

Madison, Wis. — At a meeting held at the La Follette home, it was decided to center action around Robert M. La Follette, Jr., to try for the seat vacated by the death of the late Senator Robert M. La Follette.

Mrs. Belle Case La Follette, wife of the senator, has decided not to be a candidate for the position. If she changes her mind and does so, it is conceded that Gov. John J. Blaine will run in opposition to her. So far the progressive forces favor the candidacy of Robert, Jr., for the position as his name has the support of many of the progressive bloc in the senate as well of the state party leaders.

Platteville, Wis. — Southwestern Wisconsin was without rail and mail service as the result of floods caused by a cloudburst. Scores of bridges have been washed out and thousands of acres of farm lands are under water. Railroad service was abandoned on the North Western and Milwaukee routes. Washouts also caused much delay on the Burlington, Great Western and Illinois Central routes.

CHINESE STRIKE COST HIGH

New Attacks Seen as Effort to Intimidate Returning Workers.

Shanghai — Renewed mob attacks on tram cars and busses occurred apparently part of a campaign to intimidate the shops and banks which reopened after a 25-day strike, costing, it was estimated, $36,000,000.

Serious disorders were averted through prompt action by the police, volunteers and sailors who charged the crowds and batons and dispersed them.

Prince of Wales Visits Gold Mine.

Johannesburg—The prince of Wales had the novel experience of descending into the Crown mines, the greatest gold mine in the world. He made the descent of 3,500 feet in the cage in two minutes, and declared it was an aerie sensation. Arriving at the bottom of the shaft, Wales drove in an electric train about four miles to another shaft, where the white overseers had gathered. The prince eagerly inspected the machinery and insisted that each overseer should be personally presented to him.

BLAST WRECKS THEATER

Search in Charred Wreckage Reduces List of Casualties in Kansas City Buildings.

Kansas City—Firemen and laborers, still searching through the charred and twisted wreckage of the Gillis theater building uncovered the body of one victim of the explosion and subsequent fire that demolished the building. The body was located under tons of smouldering rubbish and debris and was identified as that of Harry Likely, a cook.

Finding of the body brought to two the total number of the victims of the blast.

The walls soon crumbled and 14 stores located in the building and in adjoining structures were also destroyed.

John Hogan, a fireman, was killed, and two others were seriously injured when a fire truck on the way to the scene crashed into a telephone post.

Members of the audience who escaped said a motion picture was being shown. In the midst of a love scene on the screen there was a terrible crash, followed by the falling of the ceiling.

J. H. Moss of Milwaukee was elected president.

CAILLAUX'S PLAN INDORSED

Senate Called Into Special Session so Financial Program Can be Rushed.

Paris — Finance Minister Caillaux's plans for payment of maturing bonds provide for an increase of 6,000,000,000 francs in both the circulation and the Bank of France's advances to the state, and for issuance of gold parity bonds exchangeable for the national defense bonds that mature in July and September.

Chicago Starts War to Secede.

Chicago—The first step in forming a separate state of the city of Chicago was taken in a resolution introduced in the city council by Alderman John Toman, in which the corporation counsel is asked to submit an opinion on the proper procedure to be followed. The resolution was adopted unanimously. The resolution declares that the Illinois legislature has failed to follow the constitution of the state, which requires a reapportionment of representation on the basis of population every decade.

MONTANA ROCKED BY EARTH QUAKE

Two Series of Shocks Are Felt in Wide-Spread Area—Trains Are Blocked.

Billings, Mont.—Nearly two-thirds of the state of Montana was shaken vigorously by two series of earthquake shocks. Panic seized thousands of people in Billings, Butte, Anaconda, Great Falls, Missoula, Livingston and Helena, and they rushed clear of buildings, fearing for their lives.

Although no loss of life was reported at first, word that the temblors had taken their toll in property damage soon began to trickle in.

The walls of a hotel in Great Falls cracked under the upheaval, but the building withstood the shock.

Three passenger trains, two of the Milwaukee road and the other a northern Pacific train, are caught between two avalanches near Lombard, Mont., which were caused by earthquakes, and a special train was made up here to go to their rescue.

A still later report from Manhattan said two school buildings there had been practically demolished and that a theater, a bank and other business structures were badly shaken. It estimated the property loss at $200,000.

COOLIDGE'S FATHER IS ILL

Turn for Worse in Illness Brings President to Old Home.

Plymouth—President Coolidge came home to the bedside of his father, at this place. He went immediately to the sick room, finding his father resting comparatively comfortably despite an operation performed shortly after noon.

Only a score of persons saw the President and Mrs. Coolidge pass through the train shed.

Physicians met the President at the door, reassuring him the developments had progressed as well as hoped.

U. S. HAS LARGE SURPLUS

Estimate of Treasury Is Exceeded by More Than $50,000,000.

Washington—The federal government will finish the fiscal year with a surplus in excess of $247,000,000, nearly $50,000 greater than any previous estimate and more than twice as large as was calculated when the year began.

Another phase of treasury operations that gave rise to feelings of satisfaction was the continued upward trend of receipts from income taxes. Excluding the last three days of this month, revenue from this source alone aggregated $1,749,697,000, or $89,000,00 more than the estimate upon which the budget was based when the year's appropriations were made.

MAC MILLAN LEAVES SYDNEY

Minneapolis—Promise of good crops comes from every northwest state, with prospects of large labor demands, Richard T. Jones, district director of the United Sattes employment service, reported. Harvesting already has started in Oklahoma and will move into Kansas soon, he said, but plenty of men are available there. South Dakota reports show good crops and early cutting, starting the middle of July, and spring wheat conditions in North Dakota indicate a good crop, too, he said. Montana also has "excellent prospects."

The KITCHEN CABINET

For what avails successes won
If there be none to care?
It's sweet to know there's even one
With whom our joy to share.
And when despair comes swift and sure
And darks our world awhile,
What is it brings the sun once more?
A handshake and a smile.

CURRY

Crab apples that have been pickled or preserved whole are delicious heated in a little curry sauce and served with cold game.

Peaches, pears and plums may also be heated in a curry mixture and are delicious with roast goose, quail, turkey or chicken.

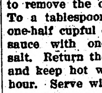
Curried Apples.—Peel and core six large greening apples. Mix together one-half cupful of butter, one-half cupful of brown or maple sugar, a tablespoonful of lemon juice or sour orange juice and a teaspoonful of curry powder. Fill the cavities of the apples with this mixture, put the fruit in a buttered enamel pan and bake until tender. Baste while baking.

Rabbit Curry.—Select two fine skinned and cleaned rabbits, cut them into neat pieces. Put into an earthen crock four thin slices of bacon, add a layer of rabbit, sprinkle with curry powder, salt and freshly grated cocoanut, one dozen seeded raisins, another layer of rabbit and season; repeat until all the rabbit is used, with two teaspoonfuls of curry powder, two of salt and moisten the whole with a little fruit juice. Let stand twenty-four hours, then place the dish in another of hot water and simmer three hours or longer. Keep the crock closely covered while cooking. Serve with hot boiled rice.

Chicken Curried.—Cook a tender chicken, cut up as for fricassee, in two tablespoonfuls of olive oil. When partly cooked remove the chicken, add another tablespoonful of oil and one small minced onion; when this browns add one cupful of hot water and strain to remove the onion, if objectionable. To a tablespoonful of rice flour add one-half cupful of water; stir into the sauce with one-half teaspoonful of salt. Return the chicken to the sauce and keep hot without cooking for an hour. Serve with hot boiled rice and chutney sauce.

Good Things to Eat.

When the fresh field mushroom may be had for the gathering, many good dishes will be enjoyed.



Creamed Mushrooms.—Peel the caps and remove the stems from a pound of fresh mushrooms. If care is taken in gathering them, they will not need washing. Soaking in water ruins the flavor and they should be brushed and washed quickly if at all. Melt five tablespoonfuls of butter in a saucepan, add the mushrooms, cover and cook for five minutes; add a teaspoonful of salt, a few dashes of pepper, two tablespoonfuls of flour, two teaspoonfuls of chopped parsley and three-quarters of a cupful of cream. Cook six minutes, stirring constantly. Serve hot on toast.

Italian Tutti Frutti Ice.—The combinations of fruit may vary with one's taste or with the season—oranges, plums, strawberries, raspberries, small balls of watermelon, apricots and other fruits in season. The pulp, juice and rind of the oranges are used. Remove the stones from the plums and apricots; weigh, allowing an equal weight of sugar. Make layers of the fruit and sugar, having the sugar on top. Let stand over night and heat in the morning to the boiling point to dissolve the sugar. Cool, then freeze.

Golden Glow Ice Cream.—Boil together two cupfuls of sugar and one cupful of boiling water for five minutes, add one cupful of grated pineapple, one quart can of apricots put through a sieve, and the juice and pulp of two oranges. Scald two quarts of rich milk, add a tablespoonful of flour mixed with a little cold milk and cook well. Blend the milk and the fruit mixture and freeze. This makes a gallon.

Combination Salad.—Mix well one cupful of minced celery, two cupfuls of diced apple, one tablespoonful of peanut butter and one-third of a cupful of mayonnaise.

Mustard sprouts with lamb's-quarters makes fine greens. Mustard is easily grown and the lamb's-quarters is a common weed. Strip the leaves from the stalks, as they are apt to be woody.

Curried Bananas.—Select large fruit that is slightly under-ripe, peel, remove the long white fibers and cut into halves lengthwise. Arrange in a buttered enamel pan, spread with the above curry sauce, squeeze over the juice of an orange and bake in a hot oven fifteen minutes. Cover with another pan for the first ten minutes.

North Shore hostesses vied for the honor of entertaining these notables. Paula — pretty, clever, moneyed, shrewd—often emerged from these contests the winner. Her latest catch was Emile Goguet—Gen. Emile Goguet, hero of Champagne—Goguet of the stiff white beard, the empty left coatsleeve, and the score of medals. He was coming to America ostensibly to be the guest of the American division which, with Goguet's French troops, had turned the German onslaught at Champagne, but really, it was whispered, to cement friendly relations between his country and a somewhat diffident United States.

"And guess," thrilled Paula, "guess who's coming with him, Dirk! That wonderful Roelf Pool, the French sculptor!"

"What d'you mean—French sculptor! He's no more French than I am. He was born within a couple of miles of my mother's farm. His people were Dutch truck farmers. His father lived in High Prairie until a year ago, when he died of a stroke."

When he told Selina she flushed like a girl, as she sometimes still did when she was much excited. "Yes, I saw it in the paper. I wonder," she added, quietly, "if I shall see him."

That evening you might have seen her sitting, fingering the faded shabby time-worn objects the saving of which Dirk had denounced as sentimental. The crude drawing of the Haymarket; the wine-red cashmere dress; some faded brittle flowers.

Paula was giving a large—but not too large—dinner on the second night. She was very animated about it, excited, gay. "They say," she told Dirk, "that Goguet doesn't eat anything but hard-boiled eggs and rusks. Oh, well, the others won't object to squabs and mushrooms and things. And his hobby is his farm in Brittany. Pool's stunning—dark and somber and very white teeth."

Paula was very gay these days. Too gay. It seemed to Dirk that her nervous energy was inexhaustible—and exhausting. Dirk refused to admit to himself how irked he was by the sallow heart-shaped exquisite face, the lean brown clutching fingers, the air of ownership. He had begun to dislike things about her as an unfaithful spouse is irritated by quite innocent mannerisms of his unconscious mate. She scuffed her heels a little when she walked, for example. It maddened him. She had a way of biting the rough skin around her carefully tended nails when she was nervous. "Don't do that!" he said.

Dallas never irritated him. She rested him, he told himself. He would arm himself against her, but one minute after meeting her he would sink gratefully and resistlessly into her quiet depths. Sometimes he thought all this was an assumed manner in her.

"This calm of your—this effortlessness," he said to her one day, "is a pose, isn't it?" Anything to get her notice.

"Partly," Dallas had replied, amiably. "It's a nice pose, though, don't you think?"

"What are you going to do with a girl like that!"

Here was the woman who could hold him entirely, and who never held out a finger to hold him. He tore at the smooth wall of her indifference, though he only cut and bruised his own hands in doing it.

"Is it because I'm a successful business man that you don't like me?"

"But I do like you. I think you're an awfully attractive man. Dangerous, that's wot."

"Oh, don't be the wide-eyed ingenue. You know d—d well what I mean. You've got me and you don't want me. If I had been a successful architect instead of a successful business man would that have made any difference?"

"Good Lord, no! Some day I'll probably marry a horny-handed son of toil, and if I do it'll be the horny hands that will win me. If you want to know, I like 'em with their scars on them. There's something about a man who has fought for it—I don't know what it is—a look in his eye—the feel of his hand. He needn't have been successful—though he probably would be. I don't know. I only know I—well, you haven't a mark on you. Not a mark. I'm not criticizing you. But you're all smooth. I like 'em bumpy. That sounds terrible. It isn't what I mean at all. It isn't—"

"Oh, never mind," Dirk said, wearily. "I think I know what you mean. Listen, Dallas. If I thought—I'd go back to Hollis & Sprague's and begin all over again at forty a week if I thought you'd—"

"Don't."

Chapter XVI

General Goguet and Roelf Pool had been in Chicago one night and part of a day. Dirk had not met them—was to meet them at Paula's dinner that evening. He was curious about Pool but not particularly interested in the warrior. Restless, unhappy, wanting to see Dallas (he admitted it, bitterly) he dropped into her studio at an unaccustomed hour almost immediately after lunch and heard gay voices and laughter.

Dallas in a grimy smock and the scuffed kid slippers was entertaining two truants from Chicago society—Gen. Emile Goguet and Roelf Pool. They seemed to be enjoying themselves immensely. She introduced Dirk as casually as though their presence were a natural and expected thing—which it was. She had never mentioned them to him. Yet now: "This is Dirk DeJong—Gen. Emile Goguet. We were campaigners together in France. Roelf Pool. So were we, weren't we, Roelf?"

Gen. Emile Goguet bowed formally, but his eyes were twinkling. He appeared to be having a very good time. Roelf Pool's dark face had lighted up with such a glow of surprise and pleasure as to transform it. He strode over to Dirk, clasped his hand. "Dirk DeJong! Not—why, say, don't you know me? I'm Roelf Pool!"

"I ought to know you," said Dirk.

"Oh, but I mean I'm—I knew you when you were a kid. You're Selina's Dirk. Aren't you? My Selina. I'm driving out to see her this afternoon. She's one of my reasons for being here. Why, I'm—" He was laughing, talking excitedly, like a boy. Dallas, all agrin, was enjoying it immensely.

"They've run away," she explained to Dirk, "from the elaborate program that was arranged for them this afternoon. I don't know where the French got their reputation for being polite. The general is a perfect boor, aren't you? And scared to death of women. He's the only French general in captivity who ever took the trouble to learn English."

"We're all going," announced Dallas, and made a dash for the stuffy little bedroom off the studio.

Well, this was a bit too informal. "Going where?" inquired Dirk. The general, too, appeared bewildered.

Roelf explained, delightedly. "It's a plot. We're all going to drive out to your mother's. You'll go, won't you? You simply must."

"Go?" now put in General Goguet. "Where is it that we go? I thought we stayed here, quietly. It is quiet here, and no reception committees." His tone was wistful.

Roelf attempted to make it clear. "Mr. DeJong's mother is a farmer. You remember I told you all about her in the ship coming over. She was wonderful to me when I was a kid. She was the first person to tell me what beauty was—is. She's magnificent. She raises vegetables."

"Ah! A farm! But yes—I, too, am a farmer. Well!" He shook Dirk's hand again. He appeared now for the first time to find him interesting.

"Of course I'll go. Does mother know you're coming? She has been hoping she'd see you, but she thought you'd grown so grand—"

"Wait until I tell her about the day I landed in Paris with five francs in my pocket. No, she doesn't know we're coming, but she'll be there, won't she? I've a feeling she'll be there, exactly the same. She will, won't she?"

"She'll be there." It was early spring; the busiest of seasons on the farm.

They were down the stairs and off in the powerful car that seemed to be at the visitors' disposal. Through the loop, up Michigan avenue, into the South side. Chicago, often lowering and gray in April, was wearing gold and blue today. The air was sharp, but beneath the brusqueness of it was a gentle promise. Dallas and Pool were much absorbed in Paris plans, Paris reminiscences. "And do you remember the time we . . . only seven francs among the lot of us and the dinner was . . . you're surely coming over in June, then . . . olls . . . you've got the thing, I tell you . . . you'll be great, Dallas . . . remember what Vibray said . . . study . . . work . . ."

Dirk was wretched. He pointed out objects of interest to General Goguet. Sixty miles of boulevard. Park system. Finest in the country. Grand boulevard. Drexel boulevard. Jackson park. Illinois Central trains. Terrible, yes, but they were electrifying. Going to make 'em run by electricity, you know. Things wouldn't look so dirty, after that. Halsted street. Longest street in the world.

And, "Ah, yes," said the general, politely. "Ah, yes. Quite so. Most interesting."

The rich black loam of High Prairie. A hint of fresh green things just peeping out of the earth. Hothouses. Coldframes. The farm.

"But I thought you said it was a small farm!" said General Goguet, as they descended from the car. He looked about at the acreage.

"It is small," Dirk assured him. "Only about forty acres."

"Ah, well, you Americans. In France we farm on a very small scale, you understand. We have not the land. The great vast country." He waved his right arm. You felt that if the left sleeve had not been empty he would have made a large and sweeping gesture with both arms.

Selina was not in the neat, quiet house. She was not on the porch, or in the yard. Meena Bras, phlegmatic and unflustered, came in from the kitchen. Mis' DeJong was in the fields. She would call her. This she proceeded to do by blowing three powerful blasts and again three on a horn which she took from a hook on the wall. She stood in the kitchen doorway, facing the fields, blowing, her red cheeks puffed outrageously. "That brings her," Meena assured them; and went back to her work. They came out on the porch to await Selina. She was out on the west sixteen—the west sixteen that used to be unprolific, half-drowned muckland. Dirk felt a little uneasy, and ashamed that he should feel so.

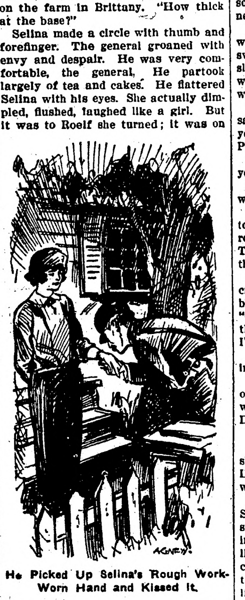
Then they saw her coming, a small dark figure against the background of sun and sky and fields. She came swiftly, yet ploddingly, for the ground was heavy. They stood facing her, the four of them. As she came nearer they saw that she was wearing a dark skirt pinned up about her ankles to protect it from the wet spring earth, and yet it was spattered with a border of mud spots. A rough, heavy gray sweater was buttoned closely about the straight, slim body. On her head was a battered soft black hat. Her feet, in broad-toed sensible shoes, she lifted high out of the soft, clinging soil. Her hair blew a little in the gentle spring breeze. Her cheeks were faintly pink. She was coming up the path now. She could distinguish their faces. She saw Dirk; smiled, waved. Her glance went inquiringly to the others—the bearded man in uniform, the tall girl, the man with the dark, vivid face. Then she stopped, suddenly, and her hand went to her heart as though she had felt a great pang, and her lips were parted, and her eyes enormous. As Roelf came forward swiftly she took a few quick, running steps toward him, like a young girl. He took the slight figure in the mud-spattered skirt, the rough gray sweater and the battered old hat into his arms.

* * * * *

They had had tea in the farm sitting room and Dallas had made a little moaning over the beauty of the Dutch luster set. Selina had entertained them with the shining air of one who is robed in silk and fine linen. She and General Goguet had got on famously from the start, meeting on the common ground of asparagus culture.

"But how thick?" he had demanded, for he, too, had his pet asparagus beds on the farm in Brittany. "How thick at the base?"

Selina made a circle with thumb and forefinger. The general groaned with envy and despair. He was very comfortable, the general. He partook largely of tea and cakes. He flattered Selina with his eyes. She actually dimpled, flushed, laughed like a girl. But it was to Roelf she turned; it was on Roelf that her eyes dwelt and rested. It was with him she walked when she was silent and the others talked. It was as though he were her one son, and had come home. Her face was radiant, beautiful.



He Picked Up Selina's Rough Work-Worn Hand and Kissed It.

Seated next to Dirk, Dallas said, in a low voice: "There, that's what I mean. That's what I mean when I say I want to do portraits. Not portraits of ladies with a string of pearls and one lily hand half hidden in the folds of a satin skirt. I mean character portraits of men and women who are really distinguished looking—distinguishedly American, for example—like your mother."

Dirk looked up at her quickly, half smiling, as though expecting to find her smiling, too. But she was not smiling. "My mother!"

"Yes, if she'd let me. With that fine splendid face all lit up with the light that comes from inside; and the jawline like that of the women who came over in the Mayflower; or crossed the continent in a covered wagon; and her eyes! And that battered funny gorgeous bum old hat, and the white shirtwaist—and her hands! She's beautiful. She'd make me famous at one leap. You'd see!"

Dirk stared at her. It was as though he could not comprehend. Then he turned in his chair to stare at his mother. Selina was talking to Roelf.

"And you've done all the famous men of Europe, haven't you, Roelf! To think of it! You've seen the world, and you've got it in your hand. Little Roelf Pool. And you did it all alone. In spite of everything."

Roelf leaned toward her. He put his hand over her rough one. "Cabbages are beautiful," he said. Then they both laughed as at some exquisite joke. Then, seriously: "What a fine life you've had, too, Selina. A full life, and a rich one and successful."

"I!" exclaimed Selina. "Why Roelf, I've been here all these years. Just where you left me when you were a boy. I think the very hat and dress I'm wearing might be the same I wore then. I've been nowhere, done nothing, seen nothing. When I think of all the places I was going to see! All the things I was going to do!"

"You've been everywhere in the world," said Roelf. "You've seen all the places of great beauty and light. You remember you told me that your father had once said, when you were a little girl, that there were only two kinds of people who really mattered in the world. One kind was wheat and the other kind emeralds. You're wheat, Selina."

"And you're emerald," said Selina, quickly.

The general was interested but uncomprehending. He glanced now at the watch on his wrist and gave a little exclamation. "But the dinner! Our hostess Madame Storm! It is very fine to run away but one must come back. Our so beautiful hostess." He had sprung to his feet.

"She is beautiful, isn't she?" said Selina.

"No," Roelf replied, abruptly. "The mouth is smaller than the eyes. When the mouth is smaller than the eyes there is no real beauty. Now Dallas here—"

"Yes, me," scoffed Dallas, all agrin. "There's a grand mouth for you. If a large mouth is your notion of beauty then I must look like Helen of Troy to you, Roelf."

"You do," said Roelf, simply.

Inside Dirk something was saying, over and over, "You're nothing but a rubber stamp, Dirk DeJong. You're nothing but a rubber stamp." Over and over.

"These dinners!" exclaimed the general. "I do not wish to seem ungracious, but these dinners! Much rather would I remain here on this quiet and beautiful farm."

At the porch steps he turned, brought his heels together with a sharp smack, bent from the waist, picked up Selina's rough work-worn hand and kissed it. And then, as she smiled a little, uncertainly, her left hand at her breast, her cheeks pink, Roelf, too, kissed her hand tenderly.

"Why," said Selina, and laughed a soft tremulous little laugh, "Why, I've never had my hand kissed before."

She stood on the porch steps and waved at them as they were whirled swiftly away, the four of them. A slight straight little figure in the plain white blouse and the skirt spattered with the soil of the farm.

"You'll come out again?" she had said to Dallas. And Dallas had said yes, but that she was leaving soon for Paris, to study and work.

"When I come back you'll let me do your portrait?"

"My portrait!" Selina had exclaimed, wonderingly.

Now as the four were whirled back to Chicago over the asphalted Halsted road they were relaxed, a little tired. They yielded to the narcotic of spring that was in the air.

Roelf Pool took off his hat. In the cruel spring sunshine you saw that the black hair was sprinkled with gray. "On days like this I refuse to believe that I'm forty-five. Dallas, tell me I'm not forty-five."

"You're not forty-five," said Dallas in her leisurely caressing voice.

Roelf's lean brown hand reached over frankly and clasped her strong white one. "When you say it like that, Dallas, it sounds true."

"It is true," said Dallas.

They dropped Dallas first at the shabby old Ontario street studio, then Dirk at his smart little apartment, and went on.

Dirk turned his key in the lock. Saki, the Japanese houseman, slid silently into the hall making little hissing noises of greeting. On the correct little console in the hall there was a correct little pile of letters and invitations. He went through the Italian living room and into his bedroom. The Jap followed him. Dirk's correct evening clothes (made by Peel the English tailor of Michigan boulevard) were laid correctly on his bed—trousers, vest, shirt, coat; fine, immaculate.

"Messages, Saki?"

"Missy Stom telephone."

"Oh. Leave any message?"

"No. Say s'e call 'gain."

"All right, Saki." He waved him away and out of the room. The man went, and closed the door softly behind him as a correct Jap servant should. Dirk took off his coat, his vest, and threw them on a chair near the bed. He stood at the bedside looking down at his Peel clothes, at the glossy shirtfront that never bulged. A bath, he thought, dully, automatically. Then, quite suddenly, he flung himself on the fine silk-covered bed, face down, and lay there, his head in his arms, very still. He was lying there half an hour later when he heard the telephone's shrill insistence and Saki's gentle deferential rap at the bedroom door.

[THE END.]

Geese on Guard

Wild geese are extremely wary, and take nothing for granted. While feeding they have a perfect system of sentries. Not content with this, every now and then two or three will fly round high up to see that nothing is even approaching them from a distance.

Their hearing is very acute, and it is said their sense of smell is also. Certainly, if they are approached down wind, they are up and away at once, even if the greatest care has been taken to keep out of sight.

They have a cry like a pack of hounds, which may have given rise to many of the legends of ghostly packs that are said to hunt an equally ghostly fox at night.

Only Real Growth

As men grow, others just ... it most frequently happens, that the utter swell in the head, rather than elsewhere, and a little money largely contributes to this. True growth is marked by development of mind, heart, and soul.—Grit

but a thousand dollars worth of farm tools exposed to rain and snow

Farmers lose large sums of money each year because farm machinery is not properly cared for. Rust and rot cause rapid deterioration of implements. They shorten their period of service and thus reduce your profits.

These losses can be decreased by housing your machinery when not in use in a modern machine shed. Your increased profits, due to the longer life and greater efficiency of your farm tools, will soon pay the cost of constructing such a shelter.

Besides protecting your implements, the building can also provide you with room for a machine shop or tractor garage in which you can do necessary repair work on rainy days. The space upstairs can be used for storage purposes.

Drop in today and let us show you how inexpensive such a profit-making improvement on your frm really is.

Farm Bureau Proves Best Picnic Promoter

The Farm Bureau has established a reputation as the one organization that can and does put over the most successful county-wide picnics in the state.

The record made by the county farm bureaus last month upholds that reputation. Thirty-nine counry picnics were arranged during June and, except in a few cases where bad weather forced postponement, they were featured by immence crowds running into the thousands, splendid programs arranged and carried out with an efficiency that caused gederal admiration, and worth while speeches by able leaders in agricultural affairs, who brought inspiring and helpful messages to the assembled throngs.

In the nation generally, the Farm Bureau this year played an important part in the patriotic observance of July 4th by holding community picnics and celebrations in the counties of various states. This plan was put over by the American Farm Bureau but, due to earlier arrangements having been made by counties here, Minnesota was unable to participate in the plan as a whole. However some of the Farm Bureau groups of this state did observe the day. Rice county had the largest celebration of the kind which was held at Roberts Lake, Faribault.

NEW ERA FOR AGRICULTURE

New York.—A new era lies ahead for agriculture because it now commands the best economic thought of the business world directed on its prime requirements of better distribution and marketing, President W. C. Gordon of the State Bank Division, American Bankers Association, declares in a recent communication to the thirteen thousand members of the division. He seeks to enlist their interest in the work of improving the marketing of farm products.

"The farmer today finds himself far removed from his consumer [illegible] by a long line of intermediate agencies, which often leave him in a position of disadvantage as an individual producer," Mr. Gordon says. "It is, therefore, not strange that he should seek to apply to agriculture those principles of production and distribution found successful in industry. His rightful ambition is [illegible] a general [illegible] of economical methods [illegible] to the marketing of agricultural products. Commanding the best economic thought of the business world, agriculture undoubtedly stands on the threshold of a new era. In lieu of fantastic panaceas, agricultural welfare—which, after all, is the Nation's welfare—has need of a sane long range program that is at once practical, constructive and economically sound."

He goes on to call attention to the "long view program suggested for agricultural distribution" at Washington by the Agricultural Conference urging study of it.

CO-OPS

There are many small co-operatives throughout the United States, handling wool, peanuts, watermelons, strawberries, beans, syrup, and other products. The government reports that there are at least 10,000 local co-operative organizations in the United States. The Iowa Fleece and Wool Growers' Association does an annual business of $7,836,253; the Ohio Sheep and Wool Growers, $1,500,000; the Oregon wool growers, $500,000; while the New York, Texas and South Dakota Associations are said to be handling about a quarter of a million dollars' business each.

Use of Radio Increasing

According to experts in the commercial end of radio, it is estimated there will be ten million sets in use in the United States by 1930. The estimated expenditures by the American people for this year fives a total of $450,000,000. $345,000,000 was spent last year, as against $2,000,000 in 1920.

Those who have the idea that radio is but the plaything of those in the city do not take into consideration that in 1923 there were 145,350 sets on farms, and that last year in the homes of the agriculturists there were 360,000 sets in use. Two years ago the farmers had invested over $18,000,000 in radio sets. In 1924 they had spent nearly $47,000,000. That there is still room in this field of industry is best shown by the fact that in the 26,000,000 homes homes in the United States there are 22,000,000 still without radios. To compare it with automobiles, on January 1 there were only 11,000,000 out of the 26,000,000 homes in this country without motor cars.

Six hundred and eighty million chickens were raised in the United States last year—thirty million more than in 1923.

Pioneer Log Cabin Shown At Centennial

Hand hewn by men to whom the old phrase "hew to the line" still has a practical meaning, a log cabin, sixteen by twenty feet in size, has been erected by the Minnesota Historical society at the Minnesota State Fair grounds for the Norse-American Centennial, June 6 to 9. The cabin, with its joists and rafters hewn with the broad ax, reproduces as accuratelp as possible such a home as was built by the Minnesota pioneers in the fifties.

After the cabin has served its purpose at the fair grounds, it will be removed piecemeal to the Historical building and set up as a permanent exhibit in the museum. Mr. Chilson D. Aldrich, a Minneapolis architect who donated his services for the work, drew the plans and is supervising the construction. The state timber and forestry departments have taken much interest in the project and are giving their cordial cooperation in the work.

Bible in English

The first English version of the Bible, based on a translation from the original Greek and Hebrew in which the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments were written, is ascribed to William Tyndale (1490-1536). Wycliffe, before him, had put the Bible into English, but translated from the Latin versions. Tyndale began to publish his New Testament in 1526. Then he turned to the Old Testament, and by the time of his death had gotten as far as the Books of Chronicles.

A few persons in New England, formerly of the First Day Adventists, began to observe, in 1844, the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath and to preach the doctrines which now constitute the distinctive tenets of the Seventh Day Adventists. At a conference held at Battle Creek, Mich., in 1860 these were organized under the name "Seventh Day Adventist Denomination" and three years later a general conference was organized.

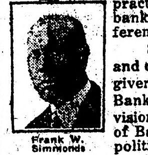
REFORMS IN STATE SUPERVISION OF BANKS AS ADVOCATED BY BANKERS

By FRANK W. SIMMONDS
American Bankers Association



Frank W. Simmonds

ALTHOUGH many states have unexcelled systems of bank supervision by public authority, in some instances political entanglements have resulted in lax methods and dangerous practices. Public opinion today demands that bank supervision be as free from partisan interference as the judiciary itself.

State banking laws are increasing in number and diversity. Much thought and study has been given by the State Bank Division of the American Bankers Association to uniformly efficient supervision. It is on record as urging that the office of Bank Commissioner be freed from entangling politics and divorced from all other functions of state government; that the tenure of office be made more secure and lasting, with sufficient compensation and discretionary power to attract men of outstanding executive ability and successful banking experience, and that bank examiners be selected from those having the requisite qualifications.

A careful study and survey of state bank supervision has been made with the cooperation of State Bank Commissioners and state bankers to bring out the high lights of successful supervision, and at the same time indicate remediable weaknesses, as the basis for formulating a model code of law dealing with bank supervision, and also for developing public opinion in favor of its general adoption.

This survey shows that in forty-one states Bank Commissioners are appointed by the governors and generally hold office "during their pleasure." In two states they are chosen by popular election, in others they are chosen by a banking board, but in only a few is the advice of organized banking considered. In Mississippi the selection is made by a convention of delegates from the state chartered banks.

Long Terms Make Bureaucrats

The term of office was found to range from two years to six. The majority of recommendations favor a five-year term, reasoning that a long term or life tenure tended toward bureaucracy in office, while a short term was condemned on the grounds that the Bank Commissioner would scarcely have time to become thoroughly conversant with his field of work before the expiration of his term of service and the public would lose the fruits of his experience. A five year term is long enough to permit his rendering useful service through capitalizing his experience and then if he is found capable the chances of his reappointment would be strong.

It was found that duties other than bank supervision are frequently imposed on the banking department, ranging from insurance matters to irrigation projects and even state hail insurance. The almost unanimous expression of opinion is that the position of bank commissioner is a task of such outstanding importance as to demand that he devote all his time and attention strictly to problems of bank supervision and regulation.

Some states impose no statutory qualifications whatever for Bank Commissioner. A number merely require that he have nominal qualifications, in many cases purely negative. Only twenty states require actual banking experience varying from one to five years.

Powers of Bank Commissioners

In the majority of states the Bank Commissioner is given more or less power to approve or deny applications for charters of state banks. Clearly this authority should be exercised chiefly with a view to supplying each community with safe, adequate banking facilities. Hence the importance of carefully weighing all factors involved such as the character and responsibility of the organizers and the community's needs for banking facilities. In the very nature of things no one is so well qualified to pass on charter questions as the Bank Commissioner. Comments from all states favor granting the banking department large if not absolute jurisdiction in granting bank charters.

A number of states now confer more or less complete authority on the state banking department to act as receiver in liquidating failed banks, usually providing that the Bank Commissioner must file a report with the court for approval. In other states the court names a receiver and the Bank Commissioner thereafter has no jurisdiction or authority. The almost unanimous opinion of bankers and the Bank Commissioners is that authority should be placed in the banking department as it permits the employment of experienced bank administrators in winding up the affairs of a bank, is more expedient economical and altogether more satisfactory.

Changes Needed

The consensus as to changes needed to strengthen the work of the state banking departments is summarized in the following recommendations:

1. Provide adequate salaries.
2. Give Bank Commissioner large discretionary power in granting charters and enforcing bank regulations.
3. Remove the office from partisan politics by providing for election or nomination of the Commissioners by the bankers.
4. Provide for a sufficient number of examiners, with adequate pay, and free their appointment from politics.
5. Give the Banking Department full authority to act as receiver in the case of failed banks.
6. Make Bank Commissioners' terms five years.
7. Make requirements for Bank Commissioner eligibility not less than five years of successful banking experience and well recognized executive ability.

Bank supervision, when wisely and impartially administered, is capable of rendering one of the highest types of service a state can give its people.

RIDE 'IM, COWBOY

(Copyright by R. R. Doubleday.)

An animated tornado on four legs, 1,200 pounds of living dynamite—such is the "outlaw" bronk, scores of which will provide the chief thrills of the Chicago Roundup and World's Championship Rodeo, to be held for nine days, beginning August 15. Wiry and daring, coolest when facing almost certain injury—such is the buckaroo, standard type of the men who will fight it out with the "bad" horses in the Chicago contests.

Broncho busting calls forth all the courage that is traditional on the western ranges and a great part of the $30,000 in prizes appropriated by the Chicago Association of Commerce, under whose auspices the rodeo will be presented, will go to the men who will fight to stay for a few seconds on the hurricane decks of the "sunfishing," "skyscraping," squealing, fighting cayuses. When the courage of the buckaroo clashes with the lawless spirit of the broncho, the ride is always to a sensational finish. Tex Austin, famous through his many successful rodeos and who will manage the Chicago spectacle, already has contracted for the top bronks from the three greatest strings of bucking horses in the West.

Young Man Is Killed By Discharged Gun

Maurice Paulson, the 17 year old son of Mr. and Mrs. L. P. paulson of Barnett, shot himself with a 25-20 rifle Sunday afternoon and died almost immediately. The accident occured when he and other neighbor boys were goin over to Mike Foldesi, to get crow bounty. Sighting a crow young Paulson reached for the gun which was lying in the bottom of the wagon and pulled it towards himself. The hammer caught in a blanket with the result that the gun was discharged, the bullet entering his abdomen and passing upward.

The funeral was held Tuesday noon from the M. E. church, Badger, and the body buried in the village cemetery. Rev. Garlidger, Presbyterian minister of Thief River Falls, officiated.—Badger Herald-Rustler.

According to the St. Hilaire Spectator, Joe King, of that village, has a four legged chick and Christ Kruse has a similarly formed goose, both of which were hatched this spring. Aside from the physical deformity, the birds were perfectly healthy when hatched. Now will some Holt farmer tell us a story similar to these?

WANTED: PIONEER LOG CABIN FURNISHINGS

What were the customary furnishigs of a pioneer log cabin in Minnesota in 1855 and where may such articles be obtained? Officials of the Minnesota Historical society have been puzzling over this problem since the completion of the log cabin at the Minnesota State Fair grounds just prior to the Norse-American Centennial.

The heavy pole bed with its rope springs built into one corner, the hewn log benches, the stump stools, the rough table, the wooden peg ladder leading to the garret, the churn, candle lantern, flail, and grain cradle struck a responsive chord in the hearts of the thousands of visitors who inspected the exhibit as temporarily installed for the centennial. Many more articles of common household usage are needed, however to complete the furnishings of the cabin, which is to be preserved in the museum of the Historical society. Minnesota citizens who possess appropriate pioneer cabin objects are invited to present them to the state.

Minnesotans Heard Ole Bull In 1856

Among the interesting cultural contributions to Minnesota's development which are recalled by the Norse American Centennial celebration this month are the concerts given in the pioneer commonwealth by Ole Bull, the great Norwegian violinist. His first Minnesota recitals were given in 1856, when he appeared in St. Paul, St. Anthony, and Stillwater.

Preliminary notices of the St. Paul concerts announced that among the artists assisting Ole Bull would be the youthful Adelina Patti. The double attraction crowded the House Chamber of the Capitol "to its utmost capacity," for two concerts on July 15 and 18, 1856. Thirteen years later the celebrated violinist gave a second pair of concerts in St. Paul, on April 30 and May 1, 1869. At this time he evidently visited the rooms of the Minnesota Historical society, for in its "Visitors' Register," under the date of May 3, 1869, appears a bold signature—"Ole Bull, Valestrand Norway."

Man Is Drowned In Reservoir

Word was received here last Tuesday that Julius Erickson, the son of Hendrik Erickson of Ringbo, was drowned in a reservoir on the Gust Anderson farm 6 miles northeast of Stephen at 1:30 p. m. of the same day. He had been drilling a well on the Anderson farm and had doubtless gone to the reservoir to get some water for his engine when he fell into the water, drowning before help could reach him.

The body was brought to Holt on Wednesday, and interment was made in Ringbo yesterday.

The obituary will be published next week.

Those sportsmen of North Dakota who enjoy coming into Minnesota to fish but who have been complaining of late because the Minnesota Legislature increased non-resident angling licences to $3.00 and placed additional restrictions on the amount of fish that may be taken from the state should take to heart the advice of W. C. Taylor. Living in North Dakota, the chances are they know that Mr. Taylor is editor of the LaMoure Chronicle, a veteran newspaperman of the state and for six years state commissioner of insurance. Mr. Taylor appreciates Minnesota fishing. He does not object at all to paying $3.00 a year for the privilege of enjoying it. A $3.00 non-resident angling licence in Minnesota is a regular annual levy upon him, too, for his automobile covers the road into Ottertail county so often that if machines were animate it would know the route. Says he, in his column, "Talygrams": "The amount of this fishing license is of small consequence. It will never provide fund large enough to insure the army of wardens needed to patrol the thousands of lakes from which fish are taken illegrily every year." Thus writes Mr. Taylor in the face of the fact that "fishing in Minnesota ain't what it used to be. And it is getting no better fast. The answer is mainly to be found in fact that Minnesota got its fish conservation program under way about twenty years too late.... And it still permits that most atrocious offence against the rudiments of conservation—winter fishing by means of net and spear. The wonder is that the fish supply in that state was not long since exhausted. The artificial hatching of fish eggs and their distribution to the various lakes of the state has thus far averted the calamity." So Mr. Taylor goes on, not complaining because the cost of his license was increased, but, while remarking casually that he had "miserable luck last week" calling upon Minnesota to keep up the good work, praising the Game and fish department for what it has done and demanding that it do more of the same, especially toward stopping illegal fishing. That sort of spirit in the matter is worth thinking about. Co-operation, not complaint, is what this man is offering Minnesota authorities. It serves as a worthy example not merely to other non-residents, but to Minnesota anglers as well. It indicates something, too, about Mr. Taylor. He is not only an enthusiastic fisherman. He is a sportsman. He should have better luck the next time he comes to Minnesyta. He deserves it. — St. Paul Sunday Pioneer Press.

Apropos of this burning question of conservation, a word concerning our wild flowers may not be amiss. We have heard several complaints made by some of the residents of Holt as to the new state law that makes it a punishable offense to pick the Lady's Slipper, or Moccasin Flower. To them it seems a law that intrudes upon the private rights of an individual, but when the law in considered, it is the best thing that could be done at such a time. Experts say that the Moccasin Flower, which is the official state flower, is rapidly becaming extinct, and that northern Minnesota is one of the few places where it yet exists. The reason that this flower is dying out is that it is prevented from growing and developing seeds. The moccasin flower cannot grow from its roots. It must develop seeds in order to reproduce its own kind. People who pick the flower of this beautiful plant are preventing it from making seeds, and therefore are helping to exterminate it.

MAKING MONEY FIT BUSINESS

When Times Are Active the Supply Increases—Contraction Follows Seasonal and Periodic Slackening.

New York. — Demonstration that complete elasticity has been imparted to the currency in the United States by the Federal Reserve System despite assertions to the contrary is given in the American Bankers Association Journal by W. Randolph Burgess, assistant agent at the New York Federal Reserve Bank.

"Of all the money in circulation in the United States, Federal Reserve notes now make up almost one-half," he says in part. "In 1920 they were 70 per cent. The increase in currency which the war and high world prices made necessary was provided almost wholly by Federal Reserve notes. Just as the increase was wholly through Federal Reserve notes, so again the decrease was altogether in Federal Reserve notes. Reserve notes in circulation decreased from $3,300,000,000 in November, 1920, to $1,700,000,000 in March, 1925. Between the same dates other currency increased from $1,500,000,000 to $2,300,000,000, due to an increase in gold certificates.

"There are still some few who produce theoretical arguments to show that for some reason the Federal Reserve note is not elastic. These various arguments raise interesting questions, but they make little headway against the facts, for the facts show that the Federal Reserve note has been elastic.

How Currency Changes Volume.

"The amount of currency the country requires reflects changing prices, wage levels, employment and volume of trade. As an example, retail trade at Christmas time is always larger than at other times. This results in a considerable increase in the need for hand to hand currency. Currency withdrawals and receipts at the Federal Reserve Banks illustrate the way this special demand was met. Prior to Christmas there was paid out about $300,000,000 of currency, all of which was returned to the bank within the two or three weeks following Christmas.

"The mechanism is that when Federal Reserve member banks need currency for their customers they draw it from the Reserve Bank. Member banks can secure additional currency by borrowing at the Reserve Bank. Conversely, whenever currency in circulation becomes larger than is required by business it begins to return to the banks and they immediately utilize it to pay off indebtedness at the Reserve Banks, on which they are paying interest.

"The Federal Reserve System has made all types of currency, except national bank notes, elastic because all except those notes can be issued in amounts required and they all tend to flow back to the Reserve Bank when they are not required. There is another phase of currency elasticity. A $100 Federal Reserve note may represent only $40 in gold, because a gold reserve of only 40 per cent is required against Federal Reserve notes. On the other hand, a $100 gold certificate must represent $100 in gold. Thus, the Federal Reserve Banks can issue, in response to commercial demand, two and one-half times as many Federal Reserve notes as gold certificates before the reserve ratio reaches the legal minimum.

Secondary Stretch.

"This secondary elasticity was illustrated during the war, when in response to war demands Federal Reserve notes were issued to the amount of [illegible]. The Federal Reserve System could have issued more than $800,000,000 additional without lowering the reserve against notes below 40 per cent or the reserve against deposits below 35 per cent. In any emergency the power to issue these notes increases by 150 per cent the amount of cash which might be supplied to the country.

"Federal Reserve currency has proved itself flexible in war expansion and in post-war reductions. Since the establishment of the System the currency has been responsive to the seasonal and emergency needs of business. The Federal Reserve Act obtained currency elasticity by placing the country's reserve cash in institutions not organized for profit, from which currency might be withdrawn or to which it might be returned in response to the country's needs. While the existence of the Reserve System gives flexibility to almost all forms of currency, the Federal Reserve notes, secured in part by commercial paper, provides a possible secondary expansion in readiness for an emergency."

The small change of the nation was enlarged by 27,940,000 dimes and 16,392,000 quarters. While a drive was started to popularize the silver dollar, only [illegible] of the "silver cartwheels" were coined. Singularly, the half-dollar is the most unpopular coin that the United States makes. During 1925 there were just 142,080 half-dollars struck off, and all of these were the commemorative Huguenot-Walloon coins. The mints coined 10,300,500 double eagles.

"Well, Aunty, you know how proud he was to get that building job from Mr. Parker. He needed the money so much. When it was finished Mr. Parker gave him a check for $3,000. Of course Jim had obligated himself to pay a lot of that out for materials and things. Well, you know what an old slow poke Jim Sykes is. Instead of taking the check to the bank right away he carried it around in his pocket and then poor Mr. Parker died. Now he must wait until Mr. Parker's estate is settled, and that may be a couple of years before he can cash the check. Poor Jim, isn't it a shame!"

"It's too bad," agreed Aunt Emmy, "but quite in keeping with most folks' carelessness about money. People should be prompt in depositing checks. Aside from such a serious thing as a death, an undeposited check is a nuisance to lots of people. Banks and business houses keep their books carefully balanced. If at the end of a month a check that has been issued has not been put through for collection it means a lot of unnecessary bookkeeping for the person who issued the check and for the bank.

"Then, too, there is the danger of loss. People often write their names across the back of a check and then carry it around for a day or two before banking it. An indorsed check is as negotiable as money. To be safe always indorse it to your bank. Write 'Pay to the Order of ——' then the name of your bank and below that sign your name. That protects the check from being used if it should get out of your hands. But never waste any time about depositing checks you receive."

"Not after what happened to Jim and after hearing you tell me all these things, Aunty!" said Molly. "I'd be scared to keep a check a minute more than necessary."—Anne B. Aymes.

DISPOSES IN 282 WORDS OF THE BANK GUARANTEE LAW

"Understand bank deposit guaranty being proposed in your legislature," telegraphed R. H. Clark, president of the Bank of Tupelo, Miss., to Paul R. Brown, Secretary of the North Carolina Bankers Association. "Such a law in any form is a snare and a delusion. It is license and encouragement to irresponsible banks and banking and penalizes capital solvency and prudent banking. It creates a sense of security in the minds of the unthinking and uninformed that is false and impossible to be realized on ultimately. It tends to debauch one's right and duty to be thoughtful and discriminating. To compare it to legitimate insurance is without reason and absurd. It jeopardizes the solvency of all banks and the safety of all depositors for the theoretical safety of a few. We have had it ten years, and the fund is hopelessly in arrears. Have been fighting for repeal and have made progress. Only repeal can save our state system of banks. Many of the best are nationalizing even now. Guaranty schemes always have been, are and always will be impotent, futile and disastrous. Consider Oklahoma, Texas, Nebraska, Mississippi and others. It is not new. Has been tried, failed and discarded at intervals for more than 100 years in this country. No well-informed, honest and intelligent mind can accept it in principle or practice. Well paid intelligently competent supervision, restriction of banks to territory that will warrant sufficient capital investment and encourage surplus accounts is the only sane and honest course and will afford all the guaranty the depositing public is entitled to as compared with all other human affairs. Arouse your people and crush the misguided effort for all time. To do so will be worth whatever it may cost, and the value will be to your people generally more than to the banks."

The bill was reported unfavorably.

PITFALLS FOR THE UNWARY

Seek Bankers' Advice on Foreign Bonds, Says Department of Commerce.

American investors in securities of foreign companies and foreign governments should take care to purchase them only through reliable bankers or brokers, says Commerce Reports issued by the Department of Commerce. It adds:

"There have recently been several flagrant cases of securities being advertised in American journals at prices from 10 to 100 times the price quoted on the same date in the markets of the countries where the concerns are located. Some of these cases have even attracted the attention of foreign newspapers. This is not a safe kind of speculation for uninformed Americans, but the would-be investor can easily protect himself by asking the advice of his regular banker."

Care of Hides.

Only sound hides free from cuts on the flesh side, well taken off, of regular even pattern, properly salted and cured, can command a high price and make good leather. Greater care must be taken in summer than in winter in salting, curing and marketing hides, especially by the farmer or the country butcher who has only an occasional hide to cure. Partly decayed hides are practically useless.

Always On The Job!

Folks are spending a lot of money today for insurance. You buy protection against loss by fire, windstorms, theft, injury and even death. Premiums may seem high, but you know the benefits are worth the price.

There is one form of protection, however, that all of us in this community enjoy every day and it does not cost us one cent! We never can know how many lives it has saved, how much sickness it has prevented, how many hours of contentment it has brought to our homes.

This protection is the service rendered by the business men of our town, who quietly and faithfully meet our daily needs. No matter what emergency may face us, they continue to supply us with food, shelter, clothing and the other necessities of life.

Origin of Honeydew Melon.

The original seed of the honeydew melon is said to have been obtained from a melon shipped from Africa to New York city. The seed was planted at Rocky Ford, Colo., and crossed with other varieties for two or three seasons. The so-called honeydew melon is the result. As yet this melon has not been brought into a stable condition of reproduction.

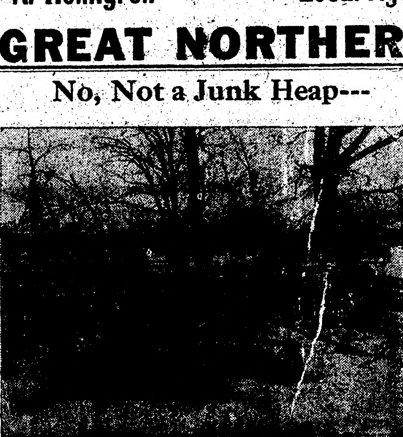
GREAT NORTHERN

No, Not a Junk Heap---



but a thousand dollars worth of farm tools exposed to rain and snow

Farmers lose large sums of money each year because farm machinery is not properly cared for. Rust and rot cause rapid deterioration of implements. They shorten their period of service and thus reduce your profits.

These losses can be decreased by housing your machinery when not in use in a modern machine shed. Your increased profits, due to the longer life and greater efficiency of your farm tools, will soon pay the cost of constructing such a shelter. Besides protecting your implements, the building can also provide you with room for a machine shop or tractor garage in which you can do necessary repair work on rainy days. The space upstairs can be used for storage purposes.

Drop in today and let us show you how inexpensive such a profit-making improvement on your farm really is.

Starboard.

The word starboard is probably derived from steer board, and became identified with the side of the ship to the right of a person at the steer board and facing the bow. The word larboard was used to designate the side to the left. This term has been superseded by the word port, in order to avoid the confusion caused by the similarity of names.

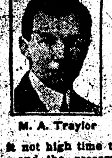
A GREAT MENACE

By M. A. Traylor, Chairman, Economic Policy Commission, American Bankers Association



M. A. Traylor

A cross section of American thought today, as reflected in private conversation, public addresses and through our multitude of avenues of thought distribution, would reveal perhaps as great a confusion of ideas and purposes as confounded the assembled throng at Babylon. Is it not high time that the bankers demand the preservation and practice of those sound fundamental principles which are so absolutely essential to the welfare of the nation? Bankers and business men of the country have little right to complain of the prevalence of unsound economic theories, of radical political tendencies and paralyzingly foolish legislation, so long as they maintain the silent or defensive attitude which has characterised them in the past.

A few days ago I heard a gentleman, supposedly well versed in politics, say that if the charter of the Federal Reserve System were up for renewal or extension at the present time, he doubted very much if Congress would prolong the life of the System, and certainly if it did would only do so after such amendments and modifications as would destroy the basic principles underlying the present structure.

A real menace is involved in this suggestion, but I wonder how much we have done or will do to acquaint the voting public, who will eventually elect the Congress who will pass upon this proposition, with the actual facts of the case. Notwithstanding mistakes that have been made in the administration of the System, most of the opposition to it is based not upon facts but upon twisted stories and the absolute falsehoods of the office-seeker, who has found it easy and popular to attack and blame the System for all the ills, alleged and imagined, which may affect any particular group.

Home Of The Biggest Co-operative Creamery In Marshall County

$1.25 Per Year, In Advance

Four Pages — Holt, Marshall County, Minn., Friday, July 17, 1925. — Vol. 15; No. 11.

What The Crookston Times' says:

The following piece was taken from the July 8 issue of the Crookston Daily Times. It is self-explanatory:

The Holt Farmers and Community Clubs drove through the rains today [July 8] for their third annual visit at the Northwest School. The Club has been unfortunate in having rains interfere with their plans each year but in spite of this the community has always been well represented. The tour today was directed by Geo. Fricker, local banker, and P. L. Anderson, butter-maker at the Holt creamery.

The Holt community has been encouraging a program of diversified farming which been enthusiastically adopted. The evidences of this are indicated by the growth in the creamery association. According to Mr. Anderson, over $12,000 was paid out to patrons during June. This, he said is a 30 per cent increase over last year and has made the creamery the largest in Marshall county.

According to George Johnson and J. H. Augustine, the increase in the creamery records has been due to the culling of the herds and the securing of better grades of cattle. The prevailing breeds of cattle, said Anton Peterson, are Holsteins and Guernseys, with Holsteins being the favorites.

The community has increased their acreage of alfalfa and sweet clover and A. O. Thompson reported an excellent crop this year.

One feature of the community life the past year has been the organization of a boys and girls calf club under the direction of W. F. McMurray, a local farmer. The Juniors are already making a fine record and last week paid a visit to the boys and girls of Norman county who were exhibiting at the Norman County Fair.

FIRE BREAKS OUT IN MIDDLE RIVER; BARN IS CONSUMED

Fire which broke out in the Sjoberg barn in the east part of town early Sunday morning destroyed the large building and one building on the west side of it, which was unoccupied. The origin of the fire is unknown—but it is believed it was started by a careless smoker.

The building had been used for an implement warehouse and had stored in it, according to invoice, several thousand dollars worth of plows, which were partially covered by insurance.

Road Contractor Oscar Schenkey is also a considerable loser, as he had eight head of horses in the barn, all of which were gotten out without injury, but the harness, forks and various miscellaneous tools were all destroyed. Mr. Schenkey says whoever turned the horses lose took the halters off instead of cutting the ropes.

Excellent work on the part of the fire department saved an adjoining vacant building.—Middle River Record.

Thief River Man Drives Into Ditch Near Steiner

While driving home last Saturday afternoon, Mr. Provencher of Thief River Falls met a car traveling at a high rate of speed north of Steiner. The driver of the unknown car didn't seem to realize there was anybody else on the road. As Mr. Provencher turned out to dodge him his car struck loose gravel, the result being that his Hudson Super Six sedan was turned over in the ditch. However, available help was near, so the car was pulled out immediately, with but slight damages and no injuries to the occupants.

Iowa Man Wants Land

Jacob F. Brissler, of Linden, Iowa, would like to purchase 160 to 220 acres of unimproved land in Marshall, Polk or Red Lake County. Mr. Brissler has lived on a farm all his life. Would prefer land that is partly timbered. He expects to engage in diversified farming. He has a complete farming outfit and would like to get settled in his new location next fall or early in the spring of 1926.

BIG SNAKE SEEN IN RED RIVER

Large Reptile Was Fully 12 Ft. Long

While fishing in the Red River last week, O. C. Solberg of the Town of Teien saw a large black and brown snake swimming about in the river. He said the reptile was fully 12 or 14 feet long, was black and dark brown in color and had a large lump on back of its head, resembling a cobra, in this respect. Prospective swimmers, fishers, or other aquatic lovers had better be on the lookout for this hideous and dangerous creature.—Hallock Enterprise.

TO BE HEALTHY READ THE COMICS

Washington, D. C., July.—The lowly newspaper comic strip, looked down upon by the elite and scored by the highbrows, is a good thing from a hygienic standpoint, according to Dr. F. W. Steward, neurologist who did not hesitate to say so in a recent address. The comic strip soothes the nerves and puts us into a better temper according to Dr. Steward.

"People whose ire is easily aroused, who fly into a rage on the slightest provocation are candidates for nerve exhaustion and brain fag," Dr. Steward said. "A calm, even, temperament is an invaluable health asset.

"I advise neurasthenics to look for the funny side of life. The liberal sprinkling of our newspapers with comic strips is a decidedly beneficial thing from a health standpoint."

A BANQUET HALL ON WHEELS IS LATEST RAILWAY INNOVATION

Elimination of Vibration in Construction of Modern Dining Car Affords Acoustic Properties That Makes Easy Its Quick Transformation for Double Use—First Traveling "Festive Board" Makes its Appearance in Northwest.

St. Paul, Minn.—A banquet hall on wheels is the latest innovation in the Railway world. The first car of this type made its appearance on the Great Northern Railway this week. The idea originated with Ralph Budd, President of the Great Northern Railway system. The accompanying photograph shows an interior view of the car with the long banquet table spread for thirty-two persons. President Budd is using this car for its utility on a western trip to the Pacific Northwest. It affords him opportunity to entertain and talk to large groups of business men and farmers while enroute from St. Paul to the coast. The first gathering in the banquet diner was at Grand Forks where Mr. Budd addressed the business men of that city and listened to discussion of matters pertaining to their commercial life.

The elimination of vibrating noises in the construction of the modern dining car and the amazing acoustic properties which it possesses convinced President Budd this piece of rolling stock easily could be transformed into a traveling banquet hall. Presto change. He simply had the waiters take the individual tables from each side of the car and string them out into one long banquet table as shown in the photograph. The only requisition the inventive railway president had to get through the purchasing department was for one long table cloth to make a single spread. The new banquet hall on wheels has worked so well that the Great Northern Railway will provide them for special trains so that delegations traveling to conventions can sit around the festive board and hold their preliminary caucuses while enroute to the meeting of the "committee of the whole".

Small conventions even could be held in the "rolling banquet hall" and all business thus disposed of so as to leave sight seeing the sole "business in order" on arrival at chosen destinations, it has been pointed out.

Thus the new idea of banquet dining cars attached to special trains may become a regular feature for many railways of the country, it is predicted.

MAGIC OF RODEO ROPERS

Wizards with iron wrists, who can send a lasso snapping through the air with the accuracy of a rifle bullet, will work their magic when famous ropers will meet at the Chicago Roundup and World's Championship Rodeo to be held for nine days, beginning August 15. A good portion of the prizes put up by the Chicago Association of Commerce, under whose auspices the cowboy contests will be held, is set aside for the ropers. Champions, past and present, have written Tex Austin, that they will be on hand to compete for the awards and the world's championship title. Austin, who has put on many big rodeos, will direct the Chicago contests. A steer or calf in action makes remarkable speed and to send the loop of the lariat whipping through the air and to have it land unerringly around horns or neck is one of the most difficult of cowboy feats. To do this and then to throw and tie the animal must be the work of only a few seconds. The experts are bringing their own roping ponies, so intelligent and highly trained that some are almost priceless.

Minnesota Land Prices Are On The Upgrade

That farm land values in Minnesota are rapidly approaching normal is becoming more and more evident every day. The latest proof to bear out this statement comes from Marshall County, where two places were sold at public auction, one of which brought $137 per acre, while the other, a well improved farm, was bid in at $150 per acre. Neither of these sales was forced and the prices paid represent actual land values.

44-Lb. Muskie Caught

The honor of landing the biggest muskie of the year up to the time of going to press belongs to Mr. Conrad Young, one of the American sportsmen from E. D. Calvert's camps.

This beauty measured 54½ inches, and tipped the scales at 44 pounds.

Needless to state Mr. Young went home this week a proud man, extolling the virtues of the last great muskie fishing water, and will do much to advertise this fisherman's paradise in his home district — Rainy River Record.

Bravolette.

A new material, bravolette, is used by a German inventor in the manufacture of safety razors. It looks like ivory, tortoise shell or marble, depending on the manner in which it is manufactured. The advantage of this material lies in the fact that the apparatus cannot rust. There is no need to dry the razor after use, it is sufficient to rinse it. Another advantage is that it is cheaper than razors made of metal.

To Mend Leaky Pail

Melt some sealing wax and put enough lard with it to make it waxy, but not too soft. Heat it smoking hot and run it around the inside of the bottom where the leaks generally come. Have the wax just soft enough so that it will not be sticky when cold. A pail mended this way will answer every purpose if not used where heat will melt the wax.

Gold in Canada

Gold was found in the gravel in the bed of a small stream flowing into the Chaudiere river, south of Levis, province of Quebec, in 1823, by a woman named Gilbert. In Nova Scotia gold was found in 1858 by Captain L'Estrange while moose hunting. Gold-bearing quartz was discovered in 1860. The Richardson mine at Madoc, in Hastings county, was the first gold mine worked in Ontario. The precious metal was discovered by a man named Powell in 1866.

Treating Snake Bite

Rattlers despise musk, tobacco and turpentine. They do most of their sleeping in the daytime and hunt at night. Permanganate of potash placed in the wound after it has been sliced deeply with a knife will neutralize the venom it comes in contact with, but will not follow it through the system. If applied within five or six minutes after the subject has been bitten, it will hold him up until he gets to a doctor.

Omar Khayyam's Writings

The word rubaiyat is Arabic, and is the plural of ruba'i, meaning a quatrain. The word applies to the collection of Persian quatrains. Edward Fitzgerald translated 100 of Omar Khayyam's quatrains. It is not known how many of these were actually written by Omar, but about 1,000 are found in different works and manuscripts ascribed to him.

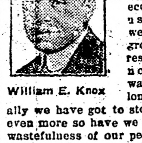
STOP WASTING--OR FACE PAUPERISM

By WILLIAM E. KNOX
President, American Bankers Association

The American standard of living, the highest in the world, came easily in the past from the abundance of our natural wealth, but it can be maintained in the future only by drastic national economy in the use of that wealth. We have grown up to our resources. We can not afford to waste them any longer. Industrially we have got to stop wasting, but even more so have we got to stop the wastefulness of our personal habits.



William E. Knox

The paramount challenge to education in America today calls for the effective teaching of personal economics—for education in the management of personal incomes so that they will give every individual a good living during his productive years and provide certain security for the nonproductive years of his old age.

Forty-four million people, two-fifths of our population, are gainfully employed in the United States, earning more than $60,000,000,000 annually. The management of the expenditure of this $60,000,000,000 annual pay check is the biggest and most important business in America. It has been estimated that upwards of $10,000,000,000 of this personal income is wasted annually. More than a billion, it is estimated, disappears in foolish speculation in fake schemes.

The spirit of waste in America is a heritage of the past, but today the country has more than one hundred and fourteen million people to support and no nation's resources can withstand extravagance indefinitely. An increase in population will mean a reduced average of personal wealth unless intelligent management maintains a progressively more economic utilization of the national income.

To teach our people this is the task of education and it can not begin to meet the task a moment too soon. The advance of civilization makes man's existence a more and more serious business. Human responsibilities and duties increase each year. If progress has made life more abundant it has also made it more expensive. It is impossible for most men to increase their real wages. Therefore they must meet their added responsibilities out of more economic employment of what they get.

The schools must teach our young people so to manage their own personal affairs as to insure that they will lead lives that have an economic worth to society and to themselves. Business must provide plans for its workers to enable them not only to earn but also to save so that the teaching of the schools will not prove an illusion in practice. Do these things and we will have no pauperism in America. Neglect to do them and we will ultimately develop pauperism,—a nation's worst social crime.

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

ON HAVING MONEY ON HAND

"Aunty, why is it such a good thing to have cash in the bank?" asked Jane of Aunt Emmy. "Mr. Wilkins was talking to father yesterday and he said that every one ought to have a certain amount of cash on hand."

"He meant that if you keep some of your money in the bank where it can be had any time you might be able to use it to excellent advantage," said Aunt Emmy. "Every now and then a good opportunity presents itself to make a nice profit in some business deal if you only have the cash on hand so you can act quickly. Don't you remember about that quarrel the Brown brothers had over their inheritance and to settle it sold that house in Center Street? Old Peter Haskins bought it in for $3,000 and the next week sold it for $4,200. If he hadn't had the cash on hand he never could have made that handsome profit."

"Yes, Aunty, that's all right for Mr. Haskins, but I'm never likely to have $3,000 or $4,000 on hand."

"Well there are other little ways to make a profit," said Aunt Emmy. "For instance, you can always benefit by cash discounts. That is, if some one asks you to pay, say $100 for a thing, you can usually get it for less, sometimes ten per cent less, if you pay at once in cash. You always should have some of your money in cash so that you can take advantage of golden opportunities and cash discounts."—A. B. Aymes.

BANKERS HELP

Mason County, Mich., bankers are backing the county move to replace scrub stock with purebred cattle. The plan as outlined by the county agent is to purchase young purebred sires and place them wherever a farmer is found who is willing to undertake the proposition. The bankers will advance the purchase price and take a note for one year without interest. The idea is to make it as easy as possible for the farmers to procure thoroughbreds.

Starboard.

The word starboard is probably derived from steer board, and became identified with the side of the ship to the right of a person at the steer board and facing the bow. The word larboard was used to designate the side to the left. This term has been superseded by the word port, in order to avoid the confusion caused by the similarity of names.

Marshall County Jail Empty For First Time In 3 Years

Harry Milliman, Final Occupant—Arrested Friday At East Grand Forks After Long Chase

When Harry Milliman of Stephen was taken to Stillwater Monday night, the Marshall county jail was left without a single occupant for the first time in the last three years; according to Hans C. Hanson, county sheriff.

There have been times when the county's private hotel has had all of its accomodations filled and there have been times when there has been only one guest to care for by Mr. Hanson, but not since the summer of 1922 has the hostelry been entirely unoccupied. Even Mrs. Hanson will receive a much needed vacation from the labor of preparing meals for the hungry patrons of the hotel during the past three years. Harry Milliman, who was taken to Stillwater Monday night by deputy sheriff, John P. Bordewick and Henry Hanson was placed in arrest July 10 and was taken to Thief River Falls Saturday where the district court is in session and was given an indeterminate sentence by Judge Andrew Grindeland of this city.

The warrant for Milliman was sworn out May 2 on a charge of carnal knowledge, and since then a search for him has been conducted by members of the sheriff's office. Since that time he has evaded the authorities and has traveled in parts of Canada returning to this neighborhood recently. He was found in East Grand Forks last Friday, and was immediately taken to Warren and placed in the county jail. —Warren Sheaf

OPPORTUNITY

"Opportunity knocks but once at any man's door. If you let her in, Prosperity will follow close behind.

"Eastern Marshall County is truly the land of Opportunity and Prosperity. They have taken up their permanent abodes here.

"Witness the magnificent signs of Opportunity and Prosperity: farms that yield as much per acre as any other land in Minnesota, pastures and meadows that are lush with green, succulent grass, fields of golden grain and waving alfalfa, prize winning dairy herds, and prosperous farmers who take pride in making this wonder land—Eastern Marshall Connty — all that it should be."

Iowa Man Wants Land

Jacob F. Brissler, of Linden, Iowa, would like to purchase 160 to 320 acres of unimproved land in Marhall, Polk or Red Lake County. Mr. Brissler has lived on a farm all his life. Would prefer land that is partly timbered. He expects to engage in diversified farming. He has a complete farming outfit and would like to get settled in his new location next fall or early in the spring of 1926.

BUSINESS PRINCIPLES APPLIED TO FARMING

"A group of farmers in southern Minnesota, operating under a cost-keeping system put out five years ago by the University of Minnesota experts, have disproved the traditions that farming never pays," says the Murray County Herald.

"They have found the farm leaks are in labor, in buying, in selling; and they have tried to plug every leak. They have paid themselves $60 a month wages and 5 per cent on their investment. They have increased butter production 20 per cent per cow, and reduced production costs; they have found shorter cuts to profits in almost every branch of farming. Their farm income last year averaged $2,471, or better than $200 a month, which is far above the average tradesman or mechanic income.

"Last year brot exceptional prices for wheat, corn and a few other products but much of this Minnesota income was from miscellaneous farming— alfalfa, poultry, dairy products. They had no magic sesame to success; they merely cut out the waste and stuck to the things that paid."

After Jessie had been at the boarding school a few weeks she began signing her letters home "Jessica." EXPLORERS LEWIS AND CLARK HONORED AS FORERUNNERS OF TRANSCONTINENTAL TRAVEL

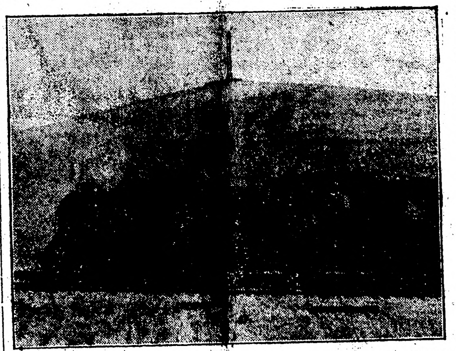
As a Fitting Tribute to the Noted Trail Blazers a Modern Oil Burning Locomotive Hauls the Stone for the Memorial Shaft to the Historical "Farthest North Spot" at Meriwether, Mont., Where These Intrepid Adventurers Found Cross-Country Travel So Inaccessible Little More Than a Hundred Years Ago.



The Upper Missouri Historical Expedition consisting of representatives of the State Historical societies of Missouri, Minnesota, North and South Dakota, and Montana, today dedicated at Meriwether, Mont., an imposing monument commemorating the farthest north point reached by the Lewis and Clark exploration of 1806.

This monument in honor of Capt. Lewis was presented to the State of Montana by the Great Northern Railway, whose main transcontinental line crosses the historical spot.

The accompanying photograph shows the monument on the hill and in the foreground is one of the mammoth modern oil burning mountain locomotives which neither Lewis or Clark ever dreamed would thunder daily through this region that they found so inaccessible a little more than a hundred years ago.

As a fitting tribute to these two forerunners of transcontinental transportation the tons of stones used in building the memorial shaft were hauled to their memorable resting spot by this huge locomotive, which will be marked with proper insignia to distinguish it for this service in the march of progress.

HO! FOR THE LIFE OF A COWBOY

Ever eat beans ("Mexican strawberries") dished up from a chuck wagon? Ever sleep out with a saddle for a pillow? It's a great life—if you like it, say the cowboys.

Thousands of Americans, who want to see how real western cowhands live and play, are planning to attend the Chicago Roundup and World's Championship Rodeo beginning August 15. Cowboys from every part of the West will be on hand for this great western spectacle, which will be held under the auspices of the Chicago Association of Commerce. For nine days Chicago's big Grant Park Stadium will look like a scene from the "Covered Wagon days" as the scores of expert bronk riders, lariat throwers and steer wrestlers show their stuff while competing for $30,000 prize money and world championship titles. Tex Austin, who has staged so many successful contests, including the great international contest at Wembley, England, will direct the Chicago event.

Calvin Coolidge Puts It This Way:

"We want co-operation preached as a principle, not a panacea. It will not perform miracles. It will not accomplish the impossible. But it is a sound, tried, demonstrated principle that must be introduced at the basis of our agricultural establishment.

It demands that the individual shall surrender some part of his complete independece for his own and for the general good.

It means that a cetain authority must be delegated, and when delegated it must be supported.

There must be faith, good will, patience. It must be understood that no very spectacular achievements will be wrought.

The Co operative Association, which establihes grades and standards, encourages the good and eliminates the poor varieties, increases the efficiency of the production, provides a unified product adapted to its market, organizes its distribution, creates confidence in its products and its methods—that kind of an association is doing the best that co-operation can do. It will serve both the seller and the buyer. Under wise leadership it will succeed. More than anything else, we need a generation of famers trained to co-operation; and to get that we need able, courageous, determines leadership, and, most of all, leadership that will not desert the farmer, but will stay by him."

300 INDIANS TO PICK BLUEBERRIES FOR THE BAUDETTE CANNERY

Three hundred Indians are waiting at the Lake of the Woods for the blueberries to ripen in order to pick them for the blueberry cannery at Baudette. The Indians were all prepared to go to work this week, but the berries are about ten days later than usual in ripening this year. The Indians in the meantime are not enjoying a very heavy bill of fare, as many of them came from other places to pick the berries, and their supply of visible cash is rather low. While the berries are late they have been growing to immense sizes, and the best crop in the history of the district is expected. In spite of the fact that there will be hundreds of pickers, it is expected that only about two per cent of the berries will be picked. The cannery, under the management of Charley Wubbens is all set for operation. The first berries are expected next week, but they will go to supply the fresh berry market, and the cannery will not open until about the 25th.—Baudette Region.

CARL NARVESON IS CONVICTED OF MAKING "MOON"

Had Largest Still Ever Found Yet

Carl Narveson, arrested last week for violation of the liquor law, was convicted July 13 by a jury which remained out from 4 p. m. Monday afternoon until the next morning at 8:45, according to the Thief River Falls Tribune.

Narveson had been arrested by Sheriff Ole L. Ihle; who found one of the most magnificent stills ever discovered yet.

The war against moonshiners is waxing hot, and from present indications the law will finally triumph.

JEFFERSON HIGHWAY TOUR ON AUGUST 14

Auto Caravan From South Making Run to Winnipeg—Pass Holt August 14

HIBBING MAN EATS 48 EGGS, TOAST, 5 HOURS AFTER MEAL

Hibbing, Minn., July 18.--"I can eat four dozen eggs at one meal," declared John Ban, of this place in a friendly argument with Charles Norwich, local business man.

Then Mr. Ban asked Mr. Norwich if he would pay for what eggs he could eat, with such other food as he might fancy. Mr. Norwich agreed, since Ban admitted he had eaten a good supper at 7 P. M., and it was not yet midnight. Adjournment to a restaurant followed, and Ban consumed food that called for a $7.50 check.

Ban easly disposed of the 48 eggs, then called for several hamburger sandwiches, three orders of toast, three cups of coffee, some side dishes, dessert and other trifles. He also drank considerable water in addition to the coffee. "I wasn't very hungry," said Ban at the conclusion of the meal, or test, and just to show that the eating of such a quantity of food had no bad effects on his physical condition he offered to wrestle any man in town. He found no takers. St. Paul Pioneer Press.

Frank Olson says: "I am not afraid of work. As a matter of fact I can lie down right beside it and go to sleep."

The New York Times asserts editorially that the metropolis is an "intellectual summer resort" This doubtless means that New York is a good place to go when you want to give your intellect a vacation.

Over in Egypt they have dug up from the ruins some eye paint which was used by the Egyptian belles fourteen thousand years ago. What is eye paint—something that the modern flapper has overlooked?

Al Smith denies that President Coolidge and the Republican administration have practiced economy and he probably believes that the decrease in expenditures started when McAdoo retired from public life.

EVOLUTION IN TENNESSEE

Thanks doubtless to the inspiration of William Jennings Bryan, Tennessee is decidedly in the limelight. A school teacher has been indicted by a county grand jury on a charge of teaching the theory of evolution contrary the peace and dignity of the Commonwealth of Tennessee. Lawyers of national reputation will take part in the trial and the case will doubtless be finally settled only in the Supreme Court. In the meantime the court proceedings will be flashed over the wires to every country in the civilized world. And a great many people will wonder what it is all about.

The question whence we came is one which has attracted a great deal of attention from the lectures and newspaper editors, especially during the past few months. Tennessee has prohibited the teaching of evolution on the theory, doubtless, that if man ascended from the monkey, it is against his best interest to know it. But is the matter, after all, one of such prime importance? A great many wonderful things had small beginnings. The truth and force of the Christian religion do not depend on whether or not the theory of evolution is the correct one.

Mr. Bryan says that the theory of evolution is contrary to Christianity. There are other noted religionists, some of them doubtless as profound as Mr. Bryan, who say that there is no conflict between Christianity and evolution. After all, Christianity depends upon the humane teachings of its founder, rather than upon the theory of the origin of the species.

Christianity is not so much concerned with the question of whence we came as it is with the problems of the present and the future. It is not where did we come from, but whither we are going. The surroundings and condition of our ancestors are not so important as our own power to THINK and DO. If we are building for the future, trying to make the world better because of our having been here, the question of whether our forefathers lived in trees is not so important. Christianity, if we do our duty, will continue to fulfill its destiny, no matter how the question of evolution is finally decided.

HOW THE NATION IS PROTECTED FROM SERIOUS DISASTER

City Without a Reserve Water Supply Against Destruction by Fire Likened by Bankers' Committee to Business Situation Without Federal Reserve System.

A vital element in everybody's prosperity is that mysterious sounding "something or other" called bank reserve, says the Committee on Public Education of the American Bankers Association, adding: "It isn't an easy matter to make simple and interesting, but its importance to every man, woman and child in the country makes the effort worth while." The Committee continues:

Money on deposit must always be ready for depositors when they desire it. Banks must also be ready to loan money, when needed, to their customers, or business would be hampered. In other words, prosperity depends largely on the ability of the banks to meet these demands—that is, depends on the "bank reserves." The problem of handling reserves has been difficult. The Federal Reserve System has met the problem more satisfactorily than any other method ever tried in this country.

The Great Solution

Our banks are managed by officers and directors, elected by their own stockholders. They are interested in helping the town to grow and prosper. But just as a local telephone station is valuable to the interchange of thought because it belongs, to a system whose wires reach to all parts of the nation, so the local bank is valuable to the interchange of business because of its connections with other banks in the United States, finding its strength and its usefulness in being part of a system.

For many years a plan was sought whereby our thousands of separate and independent banks could get together and cooperate for the improvement of our banking methods, and for mutual protection in emergencies, both for themselves and customers. We had periodical money panics, dangerously disturbing to business, and chargeable, in large part, to defects in our banking and currency system.

There was no central bank from which the individual banks could get assistance in time of trouble. Panic conditions caused weak banks to fail, and even strong and sound institutions to be imperilled. Bankers, business men, and leaders in Congress for years made a careful study of banking and finally Congress passed a law providing for the establishment of twelve great Federal Reserve Banks, each designed to serve as a sort of central bank for such banks in its allotted territory as might become members of the Federal Reserve System.

It retained the American plan of independent banks doing business under the management of their own directors and officers. About 10,000 banks have become members of the Federal Reserve System. The member banks in each district own the entire stock of the Federal Reserve bank there, and elect two-thirds of the directors. The other directors are appointed by the Federal Reserve Board at Washington, the Governmental body having supervision over the Reserve banks, though it does not operate them. Its members are appointed by the President of the United States.

The Federal Reserve banks hold member banks' reserves. Formerly each bank carried in its own vault the cash required by law as a legal reserve so that it would be ready to pay depositors on demand. The gold supply of the country was thus scattered among thousands of independent banks.

When Fire Rages

This situation may be likened to the old-time water supply in a town. Each house had to depend on its individual well, tank, or cistern. Picture such a town attacked by fire. If the water was low in one well, from drought or excessive use, water would have to be borrowed from a neighboring well. Suppose the water in that well also was at a low level. Thus the safety of all was sacrificed because no RESERVE water supply was at hand. The fire would become a conflagration.

Under the Federal Reserve System we have a series of modern reservoirs, located in various parts of the country, each serving the needs of the banks in its own district. In each of these reservoirs credit is stored up to be supplied to the various banks as the need arises. Each reservoir is in turn connected with all the others so that when the supply in one becomes low, the others may be temporarily drawn upon. By gathering the gold reserves of the member banks into the twelve Federal Reserve banks, a result has been obtained like that yielded by the construction of a great city water supply.

Each member bank formerly had to depend almost entirely upon its own resources in making loans to its customers. When it had loaned all of its own money, it could do no more, even though the merchant, manufacturer or farmer customer had great need of more credit, and was seeking it for highly important and necessary purposes. Hence arose what was called a "tight money" situation. Now the member bank can, and frequently does take the notes of its customers to the Federal Reserve bank, and borrows there in much the same way as the customer borrows from the member bank.

This reserve-storing and loaning work of the Reserve System is only part of the wonderful protection and service it is rendering the nation.

NOON LUNCH STOPS AUGUST EGG LOSSES

Poultrymen of the extension division, department of agriculture, University of Minnesota, says that the feeding of a special noon lunch to laying hens will do much to prevent the annual August slump in egg production.

The slump is one which is felt all over the country and is usually reflected in a rise in price of eggs in August.

For Minnesota conditions, N. E. Chapman, poultry specialist of the extension division, University Farm, advises the use of two parts of mash to one part of scratch feed at this season.

MORE ABOUT THE GREAT LAKES WATER

There is talk of building another canal across the Panama because the present canal is becoming too small for the traffic.

Before we go any farther with another ditch down there, how about doing a little ditching up around the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence?

That would bring the sea to the Northwest and don't forget to make it a mighty big ditch because the traffic on the Pauama canal is going to look like a toy boat alongside a regular steamer when compared with Great Lakes traffic.——Dawson Sentinel.

FAMOUS STATESMAN AND LECTURER PASSES AWAY FROM SCOPES TRIAL STRAIN

William Jennings Bryan died in Dayton, Tennessee, last Sunday afternoon. The news came as a great shock to people of this district. The government has set aside a final resting place for him in the Arlington National Cemetery, and the remains will be buried today. Sorrowing friends have for three days filed past the bier of their stricken leader, whose strength was sapped in the notorious Scopes trial.

His Life

William Jennings Bryan has been a prominent figure in public affairs for the third of a century. Born in Salem, Ill., in 1860 and educated in the Illinois college and the Union College of law in Chicago, he removed to Jacksonville, Ill., where he practised law until 1887 when he settled in Lincoln, Nebraska.

He rose rapidly in public life and in 1891 wrs congressman from his district. His speeches in congress gave him nation-wide prominence. Consequently in 1896 he was chosen to run on the Democratic ticket for president against McKinley. He was defeated, was pitted against McKinley again in 1900, and was again defeated. The period from 1900 to 1908 was spent in publishing his "Commoner", a newspaper, in giving lectures, and in a trip around the world, in which he visited many countries of the East.

In 1908 Bryan was for the third and last time nominated for president on the Democratic ticket. Taft, the Republican candidate, won out. Bryan, it is said, was a good loser, and he took these political reverses with a smile. He now devoted his time to his newspaper, to lecturing, and to writing articles and books.

When, in 1913, Woodrow Wilson became president, William J. Bryan was chosen Secretary of State. Mr. Bryan was active in lecturing during his term in office. He resigned from office in 1915, because he did not believe in Wilson's resolve to enter the World War.

In the presidential campaign of 1920 it was noted that Bryan's leadership in the Democratic party was broken. He disagreed with Governor Cov, the Democratic candidate for president, and refused to make any campaign speeches for him.

Mr. Bryan has always been an avowed opponent of teaching the Darwin theory in the public schools, and it was while defending his view in the famous Scopes trial at Dayton, Tenn., that he succumbed to death.

THE OLD WEST IN ACTION

All highways and byways this year lead enticingly to the Chicago Roundup and World's Championship Rodeo, which is to be held for nine days, beginning August 15. By cut rate train, boat or automobile, with parties of friends made up to share the trip, thousands of tourists are expected to be transplanted into the atmosphere of the real West.

Chicago's new $5,000,000 stadium on Lake Michigan is to become the capitol of American sport through the efforts of the domestic and foreign commerce committee of the Association of Commerce.

The story of the roundup and the rodeo is the story of romance of the real West. Into the nine days of the Chicago event will be packed more daring feats and dynamic action than is the privilege of many to witness in a lifetime. Tex Austin, producer of the most successful cowboy contests, will organize and manage the Chicago spectacle. Cowboys, cowgirls and bulldoggers, champions all, and bronchos and longhorn steers which have scorned mastery, will fight out the battle royal for supremacy.

From the "brush" of the Southwest to the ranges of Canada, the challenge has passed among the buckaroos who have fought out old rivalries at the famous cowboy events in Cheyenne and Pendleton. Not only seeking the glory of victory, they also will compete for more than $30,000 in cash prizes put up by the Chicago association. This is the largest amount given anywhere this year for cowboy contests. "Outlaw" horses, called the worst on the ranges, already are under contract with Tex Austin. They can't be ridden, is the promise of their owners. Carloads of steers, conditioned through the summer into their greatest strength, will defy the wits of the "bulldoggers."

The stadium itself is the world's wonder work of architecture. Its massive colonnades look down upon a huge arena and tiers of seats for 75,000 persons. It is set in the ring of boulevards and parks and on the lake front, which have won for Chicago the title of the "vacation city."

The roundup and rodeo will solve your vacation problems, so tell Mother and Sister and the Kid Brother to quit fretting over the summer's plans and get ready for the thrills of their lives.

Origin of Honeydew Melon.

The original seed of the honeydew melon is said to have been obtained from a melon shipped from Africa to New York city. The seed was planted at Rocky Ford, Colo., and crossed with other varieties for two or three seasons. The so-called honey-dew melon is the result. As yet this melon has not been brought into a stable condition of reproduction.

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

ON A NARROW ESCAPE

"Oh, Aunty, I just have to talk to you," said Maud, bursting in on Aunt Emmy. "Those bonds Tom's father gave us for a wedding present have matured and Tom has the money. A man is trying to get Tom to invest in a radio company. I want your opinion on it."

"Don't hurry; tell me everything you can remember," said Aunt Emmy.

"Well, Tom didn't seem enthusiastic. Then Mr. Brown, the salesman, said that if he bought stock in his company, and wanted his money at any time, the company would buy back his stock."

"Are you sure he said that?" interrupted Aunt Emmy. "That is a claim that is not made by people connected with dependable investment houses. Unless you have an agreement with the company clearly stating that it will repurchase its stock, signed by one of its officers, you would have great difficulty in getting the company to buy back your stock. A company cannot be compelled to repurchase its own stock. Do you know who Mr. Brown is?"

"No," replied Maud. "Neither does Tom, but he seems awfully nice and Tom liked him right from the start. He is good looking, well dressed, and has beautiful manners."

Aunt Emmy sniffed. "Did he offer to sell you preferred stock on which dividends are guaranteed?"

"Why, how did you know, Aunty?" exclaimed Maud. "That is exactly what he did."

"I thought so," said Aunt Emmy. "Reliable stock salesmen don't promise that a company will repurchase its stock, nor do they promise guaranteed dividends. Unless a company operates profitably, it cannot pay honest dividends of any sort, guaranteed or otherwise. You can see how foolish it is to believe that you can get dividends just because some one says they are guaranteed. The only guarantee in the world for dividends is the successful operation of a company. Guaranteed dividends is a glib phrase used by unscrupulous persons to get money from unthinking ones. A while back the country was flooded with fake oil stock. Now dishonest promoters are trying radio stock."

"What shall I do?" cried Maud. "Tom is with Mr. Brown now at the store to buy the stock with the bond money."

"You just go to the phone and call Tom," said Aunt Emmy. "Ask him and Mr. Brown to meet you at the bank at ten o'clock. Tell him not to buy the stock until you talk with him again. Half the money is yours. Then call the bank and make an appointment with the vice president to discuss an investment."

About noon Aunt Emmy's telephone rang. It was Maud. "The queerest thing happened, Aunty," she said. "Mr. Brown agreed to meet us at the bank at ten o'clock. Tom and I waited until eleven and he never showed up. Then Tom told the vice president about it and he said we had a lucky escape. Only last week the bank looked up the company Mr. Brown represented and it is absolutely no good!"—A. E. Aymes.

A Queer Creature.

One of the queerest creatures imaginable is the midwife toad. The female lays her eggs in long streamers, which the male collects and wraps around his legs. He carries them about in this way until they hatch into tadpoles.

WHERE MONEY IS A NUISANCE

Americans have reason to be thankful for their simple and reliable money. The complications of the Chinese currency are endless. China possesses 72 different money values. As to the money of account, the Kalkuan Tael, familiar in connection with the customs, the Hankow, Kuantung, Esaoping, Tookwai and others, each differ by varying percentages of weight from the "liang," or Chinese ounce of silver. If a traveler from Shanghai were to make an extended tour into the interior, passing through the districts where a manifold variety of coins circulate, the constant exchange from one weight or coin to another would dissipate a very large part of his capital.

An experienced traveler has been known to take scales with him, and still his weights and the purity of his silver were subjected to dispute in different provinces. At coast ports, Mexican, Yuan, Dragon, Hong-Kong and Hankow dollars are all current, each having its own defined exchange value in the native market, while in the interior the added intricacies of dealing with cents and copper cash are so great that it is astonishing how business can be carried on without endless disputes and a considerable handicap to trade.

TO MAKE FARMING YIELD BETTER RETURNS

The outstanding possibilities of co-operative marketing are more largely along the lines of standardizing and improving production, eliminating excess varieties, standardizing and improving grade and pack, stabilizing production, regulating flow to market, improving distribution as between markets, developing new markets, collective bargaining, betterment of financing, correcting trade abuses, and representing producers before legislative and administrative bodies, says H. E. Erdman, associate professor in California College of Agriculture. All of these should, of course, result in higher net returns, he says, adding:

"If I were to list the limitations I should put them about as follows:

"1. Co-operation cannot fix prices that are out of line with supply and demand conditions.

"2. Co-operation cannot eliminate the middleman. It can, and does, of course, establish the farmers' own agencies to take the places of private agencies and often puts one co-operative agency where several dealers formerly operated.

"3. Co-operation cannot reduce costs greatly except in so far as an increase in scale of operations makes for lower costs. Some of the gains of large scale operation, however, are dissipated because of tendencies toward extravagance.

"4. Co-operatives will not run alone. Constant attention is required on the part of the membership because 'what is everybody's business is nobody's business.'

"5. Co-operation does not permit the farmer to hold his products for a higher price without also compelling him to assume the risks of getting a lower price.

"6. The outsider often gets as much of the benefit of co-operative marketing as does the member, and in some cases gets more because he does not have to bear his share of certain development expenses. This is a decided handicap to co-operation."

A town that never has anything to do in a public way is on the way to the cemetery. Any citizen who will do nothing for his town is helping to dig its grave. A man that "cusses" the town furnishes the coffin.

The man who is so selfish as to have no time from his business to give affairs is making the shroud. The man who will not advertise is driving the hearse.

The man who is always pulling back from any public enterprise throws boquets on the grave.

The man who is so stingy as to be howling hard times, preaches the funeral, sings the doxology.

And thus the town lies buried from all the sorrow of the world.

KING OF THE RODEOS

(Copyright by R. R. Doubleday.)

Tex Austin, a name that is known in every locality in the country where horses are bred or cattle raised. Such is the man who will draw on his years of experience to manage the Chicago Roundup and World's Championship Rodeo to be held for nine days, beginning August 15.

"King of the Rodeo" is the title Austin has won. Born in the great state for which he was named, he was raised in the atmosphere of the range. He participated in the thrilling deeds of the famous contests of the Far West and then became a ranchman himself. Wherever the roundups have been staged, Austin's name has become synonymous with the cowboy sport. In the effort to perpetuate the spirit of the West, he managed and directed numberless rodeos in the West, also giving the East its first thrills from cowboy contests. Then, spreading the fame of Uncle Sam further, he put on the great international rodeo at Wembley, England, under the auspices of the British government.

THREE REAL CHAMPIONS

(Copyright by R. R. Doubleday.)

"Expert and daring" leaders in the great sport to which they have brought fame, are the cowgirls from the western ranges who will compete in the Chicago Roundup and World's Championship Rodeo, to be held for nine days beginning August 15. Champions past and present, as well as new seekers after fame, will add thrills to the cowboy contests which will be presented in the new $5,000,000 stadium under the auspices of the Chicago Association of Commerce. A group of these cowgirls startled the staid Britisher when they appeared in the International Championship held by Tex Austin at Wembley, England, recently, and the same champions will compete in the Chicago spectacle. Austin is organizing the Chicago roundup and will manage it, and the $30,000 in prizes is the largest amount offered for any contest this year.

Holt Creamery Now Makes Land O' Lakes Butter

"We are very proud of the large number of patrons going over the top for the month of June. It is the biggest month in the history of the creamery." Such is the statement of P. L. Anderson, local buttermaker. "We paid out over $12,000 for butterfat in June," he continues "Monthly patrons receive 45c a pound butterfat for No. 1 cream.

"The Holt creamery made its first Land O Lakes butter July21. which is proof that we have the kind of cream that it takes to make a Land O Lakes product. In a few days each and every patron will receive a circular letter from the Creameries Ass'n headquarters in St. Paul stating just what you will have to do to enable you to deliver a cream that will score high enough for us to make the above named butter. When we get enough of this kind of cream to make it worth while the Board of Directors will no doubt offer a premium over the price you are now getting."

Minnesota At A Standstill

(Minnesota Immigration Bulletin)

Minnesota is truly a wonderful state—more wonderful than most of us who dwell within its borders, and particularly such of us as are natives of the state, seem to comprehend. We have a wealth of agricultural resources capable of producing profitably and abundantly all products of the soil adapted to the temperate zone, timber and mineral resources that have been the envy of the world, climatic conditions that are almost ideal, and which induce hundreds of thousands of vacationists to spend their summer within the state to enjoy our recreational facilities and to partake of the splendid splendid hunting and fishing that our woods, rivers and lakes afford. We have the finest water and rail transportation facilities that make it possible to ship the products of our fields, mines and factories to the markets of the world at small cost. We have a well developed road system that permits travel by auto into the most remote sections of the state in all kinds of weather. We have great cities and hundreds of prosperous villages that afford good local markets, and we have factories and industrial concerns that employ hundreds of thousands of men and women at lucrative wages. We have everything that a prosperous commonwealth requires—except the inclination to toot our own horn.

Minnesota is the least advertised good state in the Union. With millions of acres of good agricultural land lying idle, with the state itself owning almost two million acres, Minnesota is appropriating but a mere pittance for the advertising of its resources. While Canada and many of the western states are constantly luring away many of our best farmers, and while California and Florida with little more than a climate as an inducement are taking heavy toll from among our population, we are sitting idly by and letting matters "take their course." The new population brot into the state thru the efforts of an immigration service that is inadequately financed just about offsets the loss to other states. This assertion is borne out by the census figures which show that during the last decade the population of Minnesota increased but one-tenth of 1 per cent in excess of the average for the entire country. Seven Minnesota counties, all but one located in the southern part of the state, showed an actual loss in population. Were it not for the growth of the cities and many of the newer villages the state would have suffered an actual loss in population during the last census period.

Minnesota has never applied good business tactics in a determined effort to encourage the development of its splendid resources. As a state, it has never displayed the business ability of a small town merchant, who at least makes some effort to classify his wares and advertise them. But a great state, to whom nature has been especially kind, seems content to drift with the streams and develop only as fast as outside forces compel, step out and advocate a business policy for Minnesota that will place the state where it properly belongs—at the top of the column among the most populous and greatest states of the Union.

INDEPENDENCE OF THE FINANCIAL KIND

By WILLIAM E. KNOX,
President, American Bankers Association.

William E. Knox

The principle upon which America was founded was Independence. The primary duty of the pioneers of this country was to interpret independence in its political sense, but independence today has another, special significance in its financial sense. The ability to apply the primary principles of personal economics, to use intelligently that common thing we call "a pay check," has as much to do with individual independence as any other force in life.

The greatest problem of independence of the average man or woman is how to get out of what they earn a good living and a reasonable degree of financial comforts in old age. We cannot maintain a high standard of national life without an intelligent management of the financial matters that constantly confront the average individual and family. In the accumulation of capital in the hands of the masses lies the hope of the true independence of a nation's people. The chief concern of wage earners is to get a reasonable degree of financial independence out of what they actually earn.

This question of how to attain personal financial independence has not been worked out on the principle of individual responsibility. The most important social needs today are a course of instruction in public education to give young people a practical notion of how to start life on a sound economic basis; and, secondly, a broad co-operative plan in American industry whereby men and women shall be helped to work out a personal financial program that will guide them toward a definite goal of financial independence. There ought to be a way for a man, for every dollar put aside each week now, to get back four or five dollars a week forty or fifty years later, regardless of where he works.

The present policy in American industry of helping employees is based on the assumption that they will ultimately become dependent. Old age pensions and other forms of charitable compensation are to be commended in lieu of a practical alternative, but in principle they are wrong and contrary to the purposes of democracy. What we want is an organized plan that will direct working people toward independence. No system can claim complete success that does not contemplate the financial independence of every employee, according to his ability to earn. It can be shown that American employees, with reasonable prudence on their own part, can reach a fair degree of independence while they are still working.

There must be injected into our industrial policy an additional economic element of mutual benefit and permanent value to both labor and capital, concerned not alone with the amount of wages and profits that are earned but with how these earnings shall be used. I am arguing for an industrial savings policy based upon the principle of independence. I am arguing for a new basis of co-operation in industry, for the elimination of poverty, and for a practical demonstration of economic democracy.

When public education teaches school students how to manage their personal affairs intelligently, and when the heads of firms make it a requirement that every young man and young woman who accepts a position shall be working toward a definite

Trade Among Friends

No matter what some folks say to the contrary, there certainly is a lot of sentiment in business. Friendship, for instance, makes more satisfactory sales than all the cleverness and argument in the world.

You like to trade at a certain store - not because its counters are arranged in a scientific way, but because the folks who serve you are always friendly and helpful.

Just that very thing - FRIENDLY SERVICE - is the power that draws people together into communities like this, where everybody can enjoy the many benefits of neighborly cooperation.

And FRIENDLY SERVICE is the sentimental reason why you find it very much to your advantage to trade with our advertisers - to buy where you feel at home, where your friends will see that you are well satisfied.

The water is carried in goatskin bags in the Indian army because the religion of the various soldiers interferes with the use of any other kind. The Mohammedans cannot drink from a bag made of pigskin, and the Hindus cannot drink from one of calfskin.

FAMOUS ENTOMOLOGIST HERE TO STUDY PEST

Davis At The University Studying Grub Pest

John J. Davis, the foremost authority in this country on the common white grub pest, is spending a week with University of Minnesota entomologists in investigating the white grub infestation in Rock County. Mr. Davis, who was formerly with the United States Department of Agriculture, is now chief of the department of emtomology at Purdue University. Oats and corn were seriously damaged on many different farms from a point eight miles north of Luverne to the Iowa line and even beyond on the south. This is the second year of heavy losses, crops on some fields having been completely wiped out. Mr. Davis and the university men will make a crop history study of damaged fields to determine why the grubs occur in some places and not in others adjacent, and what is likely to happen in the same area next year. Ultimately it is hoped to work out some system of control. White grubs are the young of June beetles and in this latitude have a life cycle of three years. The damage is done chiefly by the grubs the second and third years.

Here's an Argument

You may have been in business in the old same stand for ten or twenty years, yet be utterly mistaken in taking it for granted that everybody in your trading radius knows about you and your store. There are lots of people who have fine "forgetters," you know. And new folks are always moving in. How will they know about your store? Better keep right on advertising in your local paper. Then you are taking no chances.

MRS. HALVOR STEENERSON PASSES AWAY AT CROOKSTON

Wife Of Former Congressman Succumbs To A Lingering Illness

Mrs. Halvor Steenerson, wife of the former Congressman, passed away very peacefully at 4 o'clock Sunday morning after a lingering illness of several months.

She was born in Norway in 1851 and came to America in 1867 to join relatives who lived in Houston county, Minn.

Mrs. Steenerson was married to the future congressman in 1878 and came to Crookston in 1881. Four children were born to them; one died in infancy, the second, Clara, grew up in Crookston and died at the age of 20: the third, Stanton, died at the age of four. Benjamin the fourth child, at the age of 24 was accidentally drowned while serving as a member of the U.S. Marine Corps in Narragansett Bay, Rhode Island.

Mrs. Steenerson was a devout Christian and bore up under these trials with fortitude. She was a true, tender and loving wife and mother and a true helpmate to her husband.

She leaves her husband and a great number of friends to mourn her loss.

NO DAYLIGHT SAVING HERE

(Copyright by R. R. Doubleday.)

Many are the tricks resorted to by the "outlaw" horse to throw his rider. Pitching, bucking every second of the time he is in the arena, the broncho struggles fiercely to win the decision. No buckaroo must "show daylight" between himself and his saddle, or he is disqualified.

The sport of sports is the real cowboy contest, and titles for the leadership in riding, "bulldogging" and roping will go to the buckaroos and cowgirls who compete in the Chicago Roundup and World's Championship Rodeo, which will bring nine days of frontier life to the metropolis beginning August 15. Tex Austin, famous for successful rodeos he has held, will direct the events.

WORLD'S AUTO RACE CHAMP COMING

Sig Haugdahl, world's champion dirt track race king, will be among the big field of starters in the races to be staged at the coming Minnesota State Fair and Northwest Dairy Exposition, Twin cities, September 5 to 12.

More than a score of the leading dare-devils of the track—a bigger field than competed in the last 500-mile race at Indianapolis—will shake dice with death in the biggest gasoline derby of the year.

Other great stars who will be seen in action are Fred Horey, world's champion, Ray Lampkin, Ray Claypool, Cleo Sarles and others.

Three day's of auto racing are scheduled, the opening and closing Saturdays and Wednesday being given over to the speed kings.

FROM OUR ST. PAUL LETTER OF AUGUST 11

St. Paul, Minn., Aug. 11.—(Special Correspondence)—Twin City organizations are getting ready to hang out a real welcome sign for their friends from all of the eighty-seven counties of Minnesota during the Fifth "Dairy Show" to be held at the usual gathering place of the Northwest—the State Fair Grounds in St. Paul — the second week in September—which, incidentally, is State Fair Week, the exact dates being September 5th to 12th.

This show, the Northwest Dairy Exposition, is the third which Saint Paul and Minneapolis have conducted jointly, sinking their differences on all other matters, both municipal and political. With the cooperation of State Fair Board officials such as Tom Canfield, Herman Roe, Lee F. Warner, and Cal Sivright (who is wearing his father's mantle as a member of the State Fair Board) the two cities are carrying on this dairy promotion which was started early in 1921 with the contract for the first National Dairy Exposition held here.

LOG CABIN BOASTED SPACE - SAVING BED

That articles of furniture which economize on space are not wholly the product of the one-room kitchenette apartment age is evidenced by a recent acquisition made by the Minnesota Historical society—a combination settle and bed of Swedish model made in pioneer days for use in a log cabin.

Floor space was no less at a premium in the settlers cabin than it is in the modern small apartment, for the log cabin commonly had but one room, with perhaps a "lean to" kitchen. The pioneer davenport bed which has been received by the Historical society from M. C. Elgsten of Thief River Falls can well stand comparison with a modern davenport. The extension forming the outer half of the bed is slipped underneath, the wooden cover is clapped on, and presto, a comfortable settle with high back and carved arms appears. Necessity, whether on the frontier or in the swirl of metropolitan life, is ever the mother of invention.

Many other interesting objects illustrating life in Minnesota at different piriods are preserved in the museum of the Minnesota Historical society, and the entire exhibit is one of constantly increasing educational and historical value.

A Few Good Don'ts

Don't buy securities that are handled by irresponsible persons or unknown firms.

Don't buy mortgage notes on distant property.

Don't buy stock in new enterprises.

Don't try to work the stock market. If the public were to win, professional operators would soon shut up shop and quit.

Don't buy stock in mines you know nothing about. Many mines are holes where fools dump their money.

Don't buy oil stock.

Don't buy stock in new invention schemes.

Don't buy real estate unless you have seen it. It may be a swamp.

Don't buy from one who says, "Invest now or it will be too late."

Don't buy from one who says, "The price will soon be raised."

Don't buy from one who offers you a discount for cash.

Don't buy anything on "tips."

Have nothing to do with the "bucket shop."

Don't speculate. A rich man can afford to, but you can't.

A splendid rule is, before you buy a security take it to a conservative and disinterested banker and ask him how much he will lend on it alone as security.—Banker-Farmer.

Just Like a Man.

Seeing that he cannot discard most of his bad habits, man seeks to justify them.

This is a True Story

Once upon a time, as all true storys must begin, there was a subscriber who died owing for his subscription. He had persistantly resisted all pleas to pay up.

Just as the lid was being fastened upon his coffin an angel hovered down and deposited therein: one palm leaf fan, one Thermos bottle and a recipe for making ice.

Don't let this happen to you.

HARVEST HAND IN N. D. FOR HIS 30TH YEAR

"Big Pete" Burman Goes To N. D. Every Year To Settle; Each Year Returns To Iowa.

Valley City, N. D., Aug. 11.—"Big Pete" Burman has arrived in Valley City for his thirtieth consecutive year of harvesting and threshing.

"Big Pete," a tanned and lenghthy man of 52 years, made his first trip into Dakata in the fall of 1895. He has been in the state during the harvest months ever since.

Burman, in recounting the years of the past, tells some interesting things about early North Dakota crops, and the method of handling them. In 1895, he says, he came up here to settle. Instead he helped with the rest of the farm work until cold weather set in. "That first winter was to much for me," he said, "so I beat it back to Iowa."

The next fall, however, found "Big Pete" "rarin' to go", and again he came to the state. And he's been coming ever since—always to stay and settle, and always he leaves with the first flurry of snowflakes.

"I remember the first time I ever shocked behind a binder," he says. "It was an old time affair, and some part was always dropping off and slowing the rig up. One man, if he worked, could keep up to the machine with ease."

Pete claims a record other than in consecutive attendance at the North Dakota harvest parties. Never in the years he has been in the state has he been arrested, and never has he been told to "move on or take a vagrancy charge." Pete always prides himself on this record. He says it shows that he has always been willing to work, and therefore has always been able to find a job.

Pete says his home originally was in Ansagar, Iowa, but that he has been traveling so much during the past 30 years that "the home folks probably have forgotten me." — Grand Forks Herald.

PROHIBITION OFFICIALS NAB MIDDLE RIVER MEN

Caught Comins Across Line With Prohibited Article; Auto Taken

Desire for a little Canadian beer and something little stronger brot a peck of trouble for some Middle River citizens last Tuesday nite. They crossed in due form over into Canada headed fos Piney but on the return they carried a little extra stock in the car. Like many others they might have had their little trip with no one wiser but just at that time a number of special enforcement men appeared on the scene and then trouble in bunches.

On being halted and the lipuor found in their car they were placed under arrest and taken in to the Roseau jail until morning. Later orders were received to transfer them to the jail at Hallock. They were taken there Wednesday afternoon to appear before a U. S. Commissioner The car, new Buick coach, was also taken. What disposition has been made of their case is not known at this time.[—Roseau Times-Region.

State Legion Convention Was Very Moist Affair

The American Legion convention held at Thief River Falls on Monday was well attended, over 4,000 Legion and Auxiliary members from all over the state being present. It is averred that the Legionaires caused a very "damp" atmosphere.

A great number of Holt people took it in on Tuesday evening some putting on a boxing match and others rocking the Rye.

Take Notice

An error was made in the notice of the Ice Cream social to be held in the Folden Church, 3 miles west of A. L. Sagstuen's place. Instead of Sunday Aug. 15 the date should be Saturday Aug. 15.

DYNAMITE ON THE HOOF

(Copyright by R. R. Doubleday.)

Riding a wild steer is anything but a "pink tea" sport and if you don't believe it, ask any of the many cowboys who will try to stay on these chunks of living dynamite during the Chicago Roundup and World's Championship Rodeo, beginning August 15. The Brahma steer, a cross between the Mexican longhorn and the Brahma, or sacred cattle of India, is a fighter from the word "go," according to the boys who have tackled them, and after throwing a rider they'll frequently try to muss him up.

Steer riding, calling for an excess of skill and daring, is one of the features of the Chicago Roundup, which will be held under the auspices of the Chicago Association of Commerce for nine days. The competitions are under the direction of Tex Austin, who has managed the largest and most successful of rodeos. More than $30,000 in cash prizes will go to the winners of the events, together with the world's championship titles.

THE FEDERAL RESERVE A NATIONAL PROBLEM

By WILLIAM E. KNOX
President, American Bankers Association

The Federal Reserve situation is the paramount problem before American banking today. The time is approaching when it will be necessary for the nation to consider the question of rechartering the Federal Reserve Banks.

William E. Knox

The Federal Reserve System must be preserved. It is one of the most scientific banking systems in the world. During the last ten years, through all the stress of war, inflation, depression and revival, it served this country as no country was ever served by a banking system. We know that without it our nation would have had a financial disaster far more devastating than any that ever assailed it.

While we have this great loyalty and obligation to the System, we must recognize that among its friends there has risen serious controversy over many matters of detail. There are many demands for change in the methods of its management and in details of its operation. Where these demands represent broadly the greatest good of the greatest number we should support them. Where they represent merely narrow, diverse interests of one part of the country or one type of business or finance, they should be subordinated to the common good. We should meet on the great broad ground of the common welfare—first to preserve the system in general as it is now constructed, and secondly to bring about, carefully and soundly, such changes as are required to adjust it to circumstances of today.

The task of considering, sifting, weighing and co-ordinating discussion and suggestions regarding the Federal Reserve System has been confided to the Economic Policy Commission of the American Bankers Association. It is hoped that thereby the Federal Reserve System will be given the best thought and the best support of banking. There is no greater service banking can render the nation than this. It goes right to the heart of good management of the public economy of America.

Old Banking Institutions

The oldest bank in the world is the Bank of England, established in 1694. Banks were established on the continent of Europe, particularly in Venice and Amsterdam, about two centuries before that, but none of them now exist. The largest bank in the world is Barclay's Bank, Ltd., London, England, with a total capital of a little over 24,000,000 pounds, equal to about $120,000,000.

To Mend Leaky Pail

Melt some sealing wax and put enough lard with it to make it waxy, but not too soft. Heat it smoking hot and run it around the inside of the bottom where the leaks generally come. Have the wax just soft enough so that it will not be sticky when cold. A pail mended this way will answer every purpose if not used where heat will melt the wax.

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

ON EASY MONEY

"An awfully interesting man came to see me today, Aunt Emmy. He had a list of stocks and bonds that look very favorable to me. Take this," said Helen, handing an alluring looking folder to Aunt Emmy. "This stock is pretty good. The man said it would be quoted at 20 on the exchange a month after it is put out. I can buy shares now at two dollars so I would make eighteen dollars for every two dollars I invest and all inside of four weeks." Helen paused for breath while Aunt Emmy looked at the folder.

"If I were to buy those White Leghorn chickens of yours," remarked Aunt Emmy, "would you promise me their eggs will sell for one dollar and a half a dozen a month from now?"

"Of course not, Aunty," laughed Helen. "The price of eggs depends entirely on the supply and demand in the market."

"Well, how about stocks? Why can this man promise you this stock will be selling for twenty dollars a month from now?"

"Well, I don't know exactly, but the listings on the stock exchange are different, aren't they?"

"The prices of stocks quoted on the stock exchange are influenced by supply and demand like the prices of eggs. No one can honestly guarantee the future price of any stock. A promoter who urges you to buy stock on any such guarantee is misinforming you. A stock salesman you could trust would never make such a statement. If you are going to listen to such talk you'd better put your money in the savings bank."

"But I wouldn't make so much on it!" objected Helen.

"Big profits mean big risks, and you cannot afford to take risks," said Aunt Emmy. "The house that gets out this booklet is unknown to you. Why don't you find out who you are dealing with?"

"How can I find out about the thousands of stock houses in the United States?"

"Well," said Aunt Emmy, "if you insist on considering making investments, you ought to at least take the trouble to go to your bank and find out about the people you are dealing with."

"I didn't know banks would bother with anything but actual banking," Helen said.

"They are glad to," Aunt Emmy said. "The more people that save and invest money wisely the better it is for the banks."—A. B. Aymes.

RESTRICTING LOANS ON UNECONOMIC FARMING

Bankers in many of the rural sections of the country are realizing as never before that they cannot afford to loan money for the conduct of farming enterprises where the odds are against that enterprise ever becoming a success. The risk is too great, and what is more it is doing the borrower an injury to encourage him in an unwarranted venture.

Some farmers may resent the idea of being questioned in regard to the use they expect to make of borrowed money. A false idea of their independence may lead them to feel that they can do as they please and follow any system of farming they desire; that it is nobody else's business whether that system is economic or not.

Experiences in certain sections during the past few years demonstrate the folly of such a position. The banker is loaning other people's money and he is duty bound to safeguard what has been entrusted to him. Further, the law holds him responsible. With this obligation resting on his shoulders he has a right to select his customers. If he is convinced that a one-crop system or any other particular type of farming is unsound and is likely to be uneconomic, he is doing an injustice to the borrower as well as the depositor to loan the farmer the money.

Best results will accrue when both the lender and the borrower recognize that they are entering into a partnership and if the advantages and the dangers are frankly and carefully discussed the possibilities of success are greatly enhanced.—Banker-Farmer.

One's Judgment.

Our judgment is something we take no particular pride in, if we don't have to exercise it in behalf of other people.

Gold at Bottom of Sea.

It is estimated that a total of $6,000,000,000 in gold went to the bottom of the seas during the four years of the World war, sent there by torpedoes and other disasters.

WHAT BECOMES OF THE OLD BRIDGE AFTER IT HAS BEEN TORN DOWN

"What becomes of the old bridge after the old bridge has been torn down?" is a question that many people in Marshall county have pondered over whenever contracts have been let to replace old bridges with new ones.

Most people would think that the old bridge would be scrapped or junked, but that is not the case in Marshall county, according to I. E. Quist, highway engineer, because here every bit of the bridge that can be salvaged is salvaged and put into condition to be used on other bridges where the traffic is lighter.

The steel of the old Alvarado bridge that was torn down lately was taken to Warren where highway men painted it and put it in first-class condition, and was last week taken out to Mud Lake township and was there erected over a ditch. The concrete abutments were erected by the township and the county donated the salvaged steel, thereby saving the taxpayers a considerable amount of money. The bridge was erected by members of the highway department with the assistance of Mud Lake farmers. The steel from the second street bridge in Warren will be used on other bridges in the city, when the county erects the new concrete bridge next year.—Warren Sheaf.

POULTRY HOUSE WEEK SET FOR SEPT. 13-19

September 13 to 19 is to be Poultry House Week in Minnesota. Many new poultry houses will be built in the six-day period and many others enlarged and put on an improved sanitary basis.

County agents and other extension service men will take active parts in the observance of the week. Farmers will be organized into "bees" in building poultry houses and demonstrating every feature of the work.

"Money spent in September for good poultry epuipment will be paid back in December," says N. E. Chapman, poultry specialist of the extension division, University of Minnesota. "A good poultry house means four dozen eggs more per hen per year, or an additional sum of $100 for a flock of 100 birds."

Landlady—You needn't polish your knife and fork so carefully, Mr. Snively. In the first place it isn't necessary, and then again you only dirty the napkin with it.

Robinson Crusoe Advertised!

Robinson Crusoe was stranded—and sick of it! Only his man Friday and a goat and a parrot for companionship! He wanted to get off the island, and to do this, he knew he must communicate with people who might pass, afar off, in ships. So he did what any man does who wants to reach people—He advertised!

True, he had only a ragged shirt with which to do his advertising, but he stuck it on a pole, secured the pole in the ground and waited—for days! Didn't get discouraged at the first few days of failure, you see. No good advertiser does!

And finally—he got results!

If Robinson Crusoe, with one old shirt, could accomplish his purpose, could reach the folks he sought, what do you think you chuld do with the infinite advertising possibilities offered you?

Artistic type at your disposal—skillful printers to set it into whatever message you choose—and the folks you want to reach all near at hand!

Doesn't it stand to reason you'd get results, too?

Trade Among Friends

No matter what some folks say to the contrary, there certainly is a lot of sentiment in business. Friendship, for instance makes more satisfactory sales than all the cleverness and argument in the world.

You like to trade at a certain store not because its counters are arranged in a scientific way, but because the folks who serve you are always friendly and helpful.

Just that very thing - FRIENDLY SERVICE - is the power that draws people together into communities like this, where everybody can enjoy the many benefits of neighborly cooperation.

And FRIENDLY SERVICE is the sentimental reason why you find it very much to your advantage to trade with our advertisers - to buy where you feel at home, where your friends will see that you are well satisfied.

DR. WEBER, COMMUNITY BUILDER, GIVES GOOD LECTURE IN SCHOOLHOUSE

Dr. Frank R. Weber, the community builder, gave a lecture in the school house Tuesday evening to a small group of business men and farmers of Holt. Mr. Weber outlined a course to follow in developing the community, and suggested that we have a Community Day some time in the future.

On Wednesday afternoon he met in the bank building with the members of the Community Club, and definitely started a motion to have two big market and community days in October. Dr. Weber will speak on both days.

Watch for program announcements later.

The Mint's Sidelines

The United States mints make other objects besides coins. All of the medals for the army and navy are turned out by the mints. Medals of all the Presidents, the Secretaries of the Treasury, the Directors of the Mints, have been designed and executed by the mints. [illegible] the mints inaugurated the practice of making medals of the Under Secretaries of the Treasury. Congress has authorized the mint to make up 40,000 [illegible] to commemorate the arrival of the first shipload of Norse immigrants on board the sloop Restaur Ationen, which is to be celebrated at the Norse-American Centennial in Minnesota next summer.

At the last session of Congress there was a flood of bills seeking to have commemorative half dollars minted. The prior session authorized the minting of the Huguenot half dollars and of 5,000,000 half dollars to signalize the start of work on the Stone Mountain carving, which will serve as a monument to the valor of the soldiers of the South. On the Federal coins appear Generals Lee and Jackson, the two leaders of the Confederate forces in the Civil War.

A Flood of Coins

With the 150th anniversary of the great battles of the American revolution approaching, bills were passed last winter to issue coins commemorating the stand of the minutemen at Lexington and Concord and the battle of the Green Mountain patriots at Bennington in Vermont. Proposals were made to pay tribute in a similar way to the battle of Bunker Hill, the victory at Yorktown and other events in American history, such as the 200th anniversary of the founding of Stoughton, Mass., and the [illegible] anniversary of the admission of California to the Union.

Fearing that the growth of this practice would open the way to counterfeiting and make the protection of the integrity of the coins more difficult, Secretary Mellon openly opposed the creation of these special coins, but was not entirely successful in his efforts. He insisted that the practice introduced confusion into our system of coinage, brought about an unnecessary expense and satisfied a very limited demand because the public generally has never shown a special liking to the commemorative coins.

However, Congress felt that these great events were worthy of commemoration and authorized the coins—all of which are to be sold at a premium so that the promoters of these events may raise funds by this extra charge to defray part of the expense attached. The records of the Treasury show that the special coins, as a general rule, are seldom absorbed in circulation. The Monroe coin issue was a dismal failure—217,000 of the 274,000 struck off were turned back to the Treasury for melting up. — Journal American Bankers Association.

U. S. SHIPPING BOARD SELLS SHIPS TO FORD

The United States Shipping Board has sold a number of vessels to Henry Ford. The public applauds the sale of these two hundred idle ships as it not only means an advantage for American industry but it does away with vessels that were rapidly deteriorating at their mooring places.

The sale of these vessels to Mr. Ford for $1,706,000 will relieve the Government of the vast maintenance charges that have been going on since the end of the war and the cessation of these charges means just so much less of a drain on the public treasury each year.

They Forgot To Use Opals In The Engagement Rings

Chicago, Aug. 14— (AP) — Three couples today defied all manner of superstition when at 13 minutes after one o'clock, the 13th minute of the 13th hour of Friday, they were married in death cell No. 13 of the old British convict ship, Success, docked in the Chicago river here.

Thirteen guests carrying 13 black cats witnessed the ceremony which was concluded amid the shattering of 13 mirrors. Each bride carried a coal black kitten. The jinx-defying sextette was selected from eight non-superstitious couples who applied after advertisements for brides and grooms appeared in newspapers.

TOOK GRAND CHAMPION PRIZES IN PENNINGTON AND MARSHALL COUNTIES

Frances Faimen of Holt owns the Grand Champion prize winning Holstein calf of Marshall and Pennington counties. This fact was made known at the close of the Pennington county fair held two weeks ago. Miss Faiman's calf defeated all entrants in the calf contest, and therefore she and the calf owned by her are entitled to a free trip to the Minnesota State fair to be held September 5—12.

Miss Faiman is a real, live member of the Holt Boys and Girls Calf Club. It is a great credit to the club to have one of the members win such an honor as this.

The prize winning calf is a pure-bred Holstein and was purchased from F. D. Voth in April.

DRUG STORE ROBBED BY SNEAK THIEF

Last Friday morning, between the hours of 1 and 4 a. m., entrance was gained into Sperling's drug store by breaking one of the windows in the rear of the building. The thief was evidently a "Dope" of the hypo route as he walked direct to the narcotic case and helped himself to all the morphine tablets in the cabinet. The value of the drug taken was estimated at about $20. Word was at once sent to nearby towns in hopes of catching the thief but up to date no trace has been found.

Tuesday night of this week the drug store at Middle River had the same experience. This leads officials to believe that it is some one traveling with the carnival troupe and working the towns near where the carnival company is playing. At the time the local drug store was rifled the carnival was at Roseau, and when the Middle River store was touched they were at Thief River Falls. —Warroad Pioneer.

HOG TURNS ROADHOG

Mrs. Bruggeman, Florence Fortier, Miss Turgeon and a lady from Bemidji, while driving a Ford car on the highway near Brooks Saturday night, collided with a big hog that suddenly jumped out of the road ditch and onto the road. The Ford tipped over and was badly damaged while the occupants sustained more or less serious injuries. Miss Turgeon is reported being in the hospital as a result of the accident.—Oklee Herald.

Speaker in The Flesh Here Is 'Man on The Monument'

Summit, Mont.—In this case the speaker is the man on the monument and while the statue "looks down through the pass" the orator himself is thinking of the momentous past, as he points the way he came to the spot which brought him fame.

Seldom does a man enjoy the privilege of undergoing the embarrassment of sitting by while a monument is unveiled to him. But John Frank Stevens, noted engineer builder of the Panama Canal and other great projects, did. Here on the backbone of the Rockies he today witnessed and responded to the unveiling of a monument in his honor. The huge bronze statue stands upon the Continental Divide in Marias Pass which Stevens discovered in 1889 as the easiest way through which to build the Great Northern Railway across the Rocky Mountains in that territory, which now is known as Glacier National Park. Before Stevens found this passage way through the mountains to the Pacific Northwest there were only two such passages known through the roof of the Rockies in a stretch of 260 miles, one in the vicinity of Butte and Helena and the other north of the Canadian boundary.

The accompanying photograph was taken while Mr. Stevens was responding to the presentation of the monument. He said the situation was so unique and wonderful that he found himself floundering in a whirl of emotions. He likened himself to the Irishman who suddenly came back to life "right in the midst of the wake."

A grandson of "the man on the monument" John Frank Stevens III, had the unique distinction of pulling the cord that unveiled the bronze statue. He is a major of cadets of Shattuck Military Academy of Minnesota and his home is in Cleveland, Ohio. The bronze figure on the statue is garbed in mackinaw, stocking cap and lumbermen's overshoes, as was Stevens on that momentous winter night when in a temperature of 40 degrees below zero he took his field notes of his successful pathfinding trip.

John Stevens is 72 years of age. Soon after the United States entered the World War, Stevens was sent by the President to Russia as chairman of the commission of railway experts. Later Stevens was made president of the Inter-Allied Technical Board to supervise the railroads in Siberia and Manchuria in the territory occupied by the troops of the Allies. Stevens has served in many parts of the world. He has been the recipient of many honors, viz: Doctor of Law, Honorary Member of the American Society of Civil Engineers, Officer of the Legion of Honor of France, recipient of the Distinguished Service Medal of the United States, of the Order of the Rising Sun of Japan, of the Order of the Golden Grain of China, of the Order of the Striped Tiger of China, of the War Cross of the Republic of Czecho Slovakia. He was given the John Fritz medal of 1925, awarded by a board representing four great societies of engineers. He has been commended by the leading diplomats, executives and statesmen of the world. But, he declared today that the memory of the winter night of December 11, 1889, when he stood on Marias Pass and realized that success attended his efforts will give him greater satisfaction than any other day in all his career.

Pierce Butler, Associate Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court, who spoke at the unveiling, said, among other things:

"And, Mr. Stevens", is it not a satisfaction to you to know that this splendid monument will stand as a memorial of what you endured and accomplished in these mountains? May I, on behalf of the National Geographic Society that I have the honor here to represent, present to you these wild flowers gathered from the mountainside where your statue is ever to stand?"

The bouquet of wild flowers presented consisted of about twenty varieties of mountainside posies of brilliant hues.

Football Star Is Champion Bricklayer: Gets $16 A Day

Kansas City, Mo., Aug. 15.—Laying 36,000 bricks a day, or aproximately three and one-half carloads, James Brown, an Indian and former Carlyle (Pa.) football player, has gained a reputation among the construction workers on a highway near here, as being the champion bricklayer of the world.

So fast does he work that five men are kept busy keeping him supplied with brick, and two others keep the face of the road even ahead of him.

H. M. Stucker, in charge of the construction work, said that Brown was the highest paid street brick layer in the Middle West. He receives $2 an hour, $16 a day.

A French savant says the coming winter will be as hard as the one in 1553. As we don't remember how bad that one was we are not going to worry about it yet.

There is trouble in the New York Four Hundred again. The bricklayers have gone out on a strike.

Hold up men took $4,000 in cash and a basketful of jewelry from thirty members of a Democratic club in New York. And yet some Democrats try to tell us that theirs is the poor man's party.

Chicago now avenges a murder a day. If it keeps it up, some morning it will wake up and find itself a dead town.

It is said that there is no leisure class in Finland. Wonder what becomes of all the soap-boxes?

Anyhow there's no use becoming too pessimistic. The coal outlook is always dark.

The people in America may disagree on evolution but they are all in favor of one thing, and that is tax reduction.

One of the latest acts of the Bolshevist government is the seizing of a Russian farmer's entire holdings; seized because he was two weeks late in the payment of his taxes, which amounted to the staggering total of 45c. This confiscation of a farmer's land, his implements, stock, house and furniture, which the Soviet, Communistic, anarchistic, socialistic government has put in force is certainly one that is not to be desired in this country; and yet strange enough to relate there are some in this country who preach the very doctrine that robbed this poor Russian peasant of all he had simply because he was two weeks late in paying taxes amounting to 45c.

When your car gets stuck in mud and the rear wheels merely spin around and your friend advices you to call for help, get a bunch of newspapers, slip them under the rear wheels, turn on the juice, and see the car come out of the mire. Newspapers are great uplifters. When your business gets into a rut the newspaper will help you out if you use the advertising columns. Great is the power of the press. —Springfield Advance-Press.

"IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE"

During recess at a country school the following notice was written on the blackboard:

"I am willing to kiss any girl in this school. Your patronage is solicited. Tommy Jones."

The young teacher blushed prettily as she erased the notice and requested Tommy to remain after school. Several of his schoolmates, feeling that Tommy was in for a "strapping," loitered outside while he was detained by the teacher. After a long wait, he appeared and was immediately besieged with questions as to what had happened.

"I ain't tellin'," said Tommy. "All I got to say is, 'It pays to advertise'."

A burglar got into the house of a lawyer the other day. By superhuman efforts he escaped without losing anything but his time.

WHY IT FAILED

Political Boss: "See here, didn't I tell you to run this paper so I'd get plenty of votes?"

Hired Editor: "I have never lost a chance to appeal to the prejudice of your constituents."

Political Boss: "Then how does it happen that my political strength is no greater than it was before?"

Hired Editor: "The people you depend on can't read."

OLD BESS SURE LAUGHED LAST

By MARY R. RYAN

(©, 1924, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

OLD EBEN, ruefully nursing his left knee, limped into the Bartlett Corners general store. With a nod to "Dad" Whitecross, proprietor of the store, and an uncivil glance at Joe Larrabee, who had bested Old Eben in their last three checker matches, he carefully deposited himself on his favorite box behind the stove, and stared, with unseeing eyes, at the pile of "dress goods and ladies' wear" on the shelf behind the counter.

The open box of prunes beside him, usually seductive, went unnoticed, for Old Eben, as was evidenced by the open-mouthed amazement of the small circle surveying him, was not himself this evening.

"Dude" Jenkins, who had been the town sport 40 years before, but who had long since abandoned his frivolous ways, broke the silence.

"What's ailin' you, Eben? Gone and got married? I thought I saw you whitewashin' the Widow Anderson's henhouse last week."

Old Eben ceased his contemplation of the dress goods. Flashing, by way of an answer, a withering look at the audacious "Dude," he tenderly lifted his left leg over its mate, and turned a sorrowful countenance in "Dad" Whitecross' direction.

"Old Bess and me had a fallin 'out today," he began. "You know, 'Dad' durin' spring plowin', she's too busy cuttin' furrows and I'm too busy follerin' the plow for us to play high jinks considerable, and that's true, likewise, durin' plantin' and harvestin'. It's different, howsomever, when marketin's over, and all that's left to do is the milkin' and other chores.

"That's why I hitched Old Bess in the carriage today for a trot over to Cummins' Crossroads.

"Bein' as this was our first chance at sportin' since last spring, I'd spruced up a bit and had given Bess a slickin' up all over. So we started down the valley road in good spirits, Old Bess never slackenin' speed until we pulled up in front of Homer Walton's grain store at the Crossroads.

"Hitchin' her to the post, I was givin' Bess a few apples as a sort of appetizer for her oats, when I noticed Sid Perkins' boy comin' along Main street with an armful of groceries that his maw had sent him to the store for. When he came to where Bess and me were passin' the time of day, he stumbled and his packages went kerplunk all over the sidewalk in front of Homer's store.

"I put the apples back in my pockets and was helping the boy pick up the groceries when I noticed what was in one of the packages."

Old Eben paused. He did not appear to notice that the checker players had abandoned their game. He had no eyes for the fact that Sim Adams had forgotten to whittle. After tenderly testing the joints of his left leg, followed by a prodigious sigh, he resumed his narrative.

"It was Cheyenne pepper, 'Dad.' And right there I made a mistake, though old Nick must had a finger in it for sure. Feelin' kind of skittish, I thought it would be a right smart joke on Bess if I put some of the pepper in one of the apples and feed it to her.

"After cuttin' a deep hole near the stem I jammed in about half a spoonful, gave her the apple and stood back waitin' for somethin' to happen.

"It didn't take long for Old Bess to find that pepper. She gave me a quick look of surprise and started to cough and sneeze, while the Adams boy and me leaned on the hitchin' rail and laffed fit to bust.

"With my sides achin' from the laffin', I fetched her some water, but Bess acted mighty suspicious before she would take any, and she sniffed careful-like before eatin' her oats.

"Toward sundown I came back to where Bess was hitched, but not likin' the way she looked at me, I didn't stop to fraternize any, but climbed into the carriage and started home.

"We'd just passed Larkin's bridge and was comin' into the valley road when Old Bess opened up with a burst of speed like she showed nine years ago when she won the county cup.

"I tried to hold her in, but she remembered the pepper and pulled away into a gallop that cut my hands and like to have shook me to pieces.

"You know that hole in the road alongside Perkins' pasture? Well, 'Dad,' Old Bess knows that hole, too, and in 10 years she has always gone around it—that is, until today."

Old Eben's audience drew closer. The ticking of 'Dad's' old clock up above the cider barrel was the only sound heard as the narrator paused before revealing the climax of his strange recital.

"When I had picked myself out of the burdock bushes and had walked the last mile to home, Old Bess was standin' at the gate, and I'll take my oath that she had a twinkle in her eye when I went up to ask her pardon."

Out of Tune

A young fellow was trying hard to explain to the salesman what he wanted.

"Now, haven't you this song? It goes zim-zim, zum-zum, zang-zang. You know."

And the salesman was trying very hard to follow him.

"Sorry," said the salesman, "but I don't seem to recognize the tune. What are the words?"

"Those are the words."

The bulk of lemons entering into world trade are from Italy. Her exports in both 1920 and 1921 were approximately 4,000,000 boxes, which was about half the pre-war figure of 8,000,000 boxes. Imports into the United Kingdom amounted to 1,000,000 boxes in 1921, as compared with 700,000 boxes in 1920 and 900,000 boxes in 1913. After the United Kingdom, Germany and the Netherlands are the heaviest importers of lemons.

Murder or Suicide?

"Lost—A little, fat, grey, pug dog; lost him at Holt on the fourth. Finder will please notify Alfred Skjevland, at Newfolden, Minn."

The above advertisement appeared in this paper two weeks ago and our army of readers forthwith began to search for the missing pet. After several days he was found in a well at the Holt creamery. The finder says the owner is welcome to him, if he wants him and is willing to pay for the removal of the body, funeral expenses and the labor of cleaning out the well. No inquest was held, but it is said that the intelligent canine, a Newfolden dog, had followed the crowd from that place off the baseball field here when the game was called off, and was so disgusted with the ball players in general, that he committed suicide and tried to inter his own remains at the same time in order to save post mortem expenses. Others intimate that the pup was in an ugly mood as the result of the baseball fiasco; that he turned up both ends and marched off the field with the others from Newfolden; that he voiced his indignation too freely among his associates and was foully murdered by some other angry pup. Being a pug, he was probably pugnacious: now he isn't. Peter Anderson, the buttermaker here, and Les Silbaugh, his assistant, will swear that he was found he was not only dead, but terribly turned up and wrinkled. He had a turned up point at each end before he turned up missing, and had turned up his toes before he finally turned up dead.

You Bet!

Success in business depends on infinite attention to detail; and it also depends on selecting a location where there isn't too much of that kind of business.

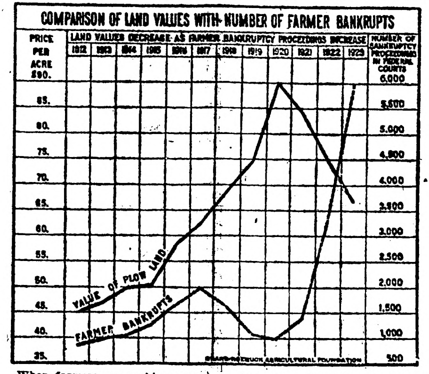
The Future of Farm Land Values



When farmers are making money on their crops the value of plow land runs high and bankruptcies are few. Reverse the situation and the bankruptcy line takes a straight upward turn. That's what is happening now. Farmer bankruptcies are on the increase, land values are sliding down the scale due to the slump of agricultural prices since the war.

What does the future hold for farm land owners? Is this the time to buy or sell?

The Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation, after completing a survey of land values covering a period of sixty years, predicts that high land values are coming back and that within a decade farm land prices will again be on the climb.

From the days of the Civil war to around 1900 farm land values showed little change. Land was considered a safe investment. Beginning in 1900 values began to rise; by 1910 the acre price had doubled. Still land continued to rise chiefly because of the advance in the prices of farm products.

The war brought higher prices for farm products, crop values increased. The result was a land boom. By 1920 the average price of land per acre was $90, $30 higher than in 1917 at the opening of the war. Farm bankruptcies dropped from 2,000 in 1917 to 1,000 in 1919.

During the prosperity period of the war many farms were bought. During the land boom it is estimated that 10 per cent of the country's farms changed hands. Following the war the collapse in prices of grains and live stock sent land values tumbling for the first time in twenty-five years. Average plow land decreased in value from an average of $90 per acre in 1920 to $65 in 1923. Crop values per acre fell from $36 in 1919 to $15 in 1921. During the past two years there has been a gradual increase, the average for 1922 being $20 and last year the average rising to $22. Farmer bankruptcy proceedings in the federal courts jumped from 1,000 in 1920 to 6,000 in 1923. More than 8½ per cent of the land owners in 15 corn and wheat producing states in the upper Mississippi valley lost their farms.

In twenty-five years the United States should be producing on a domestic basis in practically everything, unless production makes material increases. People are moving from the land. Then the farm-to-city movement will reverse itself. Land values will increase with the price levels. Bankruptcies will decrease with the rise in land values. The present tendency in prices is down. They may continue down for a decade. During this time land prices may sag considerably. But with a return of production prices of farm land will go up.

What Do Folks Think Of You?

Through all the years from early manhood until his fingers grow stiff and his eyes dim, a man may study printing, and in the end be very far from knowing all there is to be known about that fine art

Volumes that might fill libraries have been written on the subject. Thick trade journals discuss the news and the technique of the business in all its phases. The subject is inexhaustible and steadily progresses

But do you know, every day of the year men go to their printers with INSTRUCTIONS, without once thinking to ask for SUGGESTIONS? We're not condemning the men; probably it's the printer's fault. We're simply wondering why it is that shrewd business men neglect so rich and obvious an opportunity and do it so frequently.

The upshot of it all is that men look at this letterhead and say this firm is solid and successful and wholly desirable to do business with; then look at that letterhead and say that that firm is cheap and obscure and to be avoided in business. Perhaps in either case the reverse is true! Such is the power of printing.

Then what do folks think of your folks who know you only by your printed matter?

Getting around to concrete facts, we have men here who can turn out very good work. You pay for good printing, why not get it—from us?

Along the entire Lower California coast line, longer than from Key West to Boston, there is only one all-the-year-around stream entering the sea.

Breadfruit.

The breadfruit, with the cocoanut and banana, furnishes the chief food of the natives of the Pacific islands. That is why we call it "breadfruit," because, for them, it takes the place of bread. Apart from its fruit, the tree itself is a very useful one, for, when beaten out, the inner bark forms a fine white cloth called tapa cloth.

STATE FAIR BILL FULL OF THRILLS

World's Greatest Features Engaged for World's Greatest Fair, Sept. 5 to 12.

A colossal entertainment program, costing $150,000.00, has been arranged for this year's Minnesota State Fair and Northwest Dairy Exposition, Twin cities, September 5 to 12.

Action, speed, and thrills galore are promised fair visitors by this spectacular program, which will feature horse racing, auto racing, open-air circus acts, fireworks, auto push ball, band concerts, and a midway with 25 high class attractions and rides.

Champion Trotter Coming.

Peter Manning, world's champion trotter, will headline the harness program. Peter Manning will attempt to break his present world's record of 1:56¾ seconds made at Lexington, Ky., October 4th, 1922. In addition to Peter Manning's exhibition, fourteen harness and nine running horse races are scheduled. The fair is offering $24,000.00 in purses, with entry money to be added. Horse racing is scheduled for September 7, 8, 10 and 11.

A world's champion also will be seen in action shaking dice with death in the ever-spectacular auto races on the program. Sig Haugdahl—Minnesota's own—world's dirt track race king, who has traveled at a rate faster than 3-miles-a-minute in his "White Streak," will defend his racing crown against the leading speed demons of the country, including Fred Horey of St. Paul, Ray Lampkin of Kansas City, Johnny De Palma of Los Angeles, Cleo Sarles, and others. Auto races are scheduled the opening and closing Saturdays and Wednesday.

The Royal Scotch Highlanders, Roy D. Smith conductor, will furnish the musical treat of the fair. Two concerts daily will be given. Bobbie Brollier, a Scotch tenor soloist, and Miss Dora Hilton, a soprano soloist, will appear with the Highlanders. The Minnesota State band of St. Paul, Minneapolis Working Boys' Band, Michael Jalma and his Band of Minneapolis, and a dozen other bands and orchestras also have been engaged.

Circus Acts Booked.

The open-air acts to be presented in front of the grandstand have been recruited from all parts of the world.

Captain Jack Payne, premier high diver, will thrill visitors with his back somersault dive from the top of a 80-foot ladder into a shallow tank

"Rome, under Nero," the most daring, novel and entertaining fireworks spectacle ever attempted, will be the night show feature. Tons and tons of fireworks will be shot off nightly.

Morris and Castle's stellar attractions featuring 25 rides and shows will be found on the midway.

Amazing feats of foot-balancing, featuring somersaults and daring tumbling of all kinds, will be presented by the Jansley troupe. The Four Readings, hand-to-hand balancers, will thrill visitors with a sensational "neck-to-neck" dive made from the top of a 20-foot stand.

Yes, but Why Tell Us About It?

A coin-stamping machine, used by the government turns out 300 10-cent pieces a minute.

No More "Mark Twain."

An apparatus for making soundings under any weather conditions and at any speed in rivers and shoal waters by the means of projected light instead of "heaving the lead," has been invented by an Englishman.

Care of Hides.

Only sound hides free from cuts on the flesh side, well taken off, of regular even pattern, properly salted and cured, can command a high price and make good leather. Greater care must be taken in summer than in winter in salting, curing and marketing hides, especially by the farmer or the country butcher who has only an occasional hide to cure. Partly decayed hides are practically useless.
